

Getting Consent

When I want to play rough with a friend, I need consent.

Consent means that everybody has said "yes!" to playing the game.

First, I need to ask "Do you want to play fight?"

If they say no, I need to stop. They have not given me consent to touch their body. I need to find something else to do.

If they say yes, yay! We can play!

After they've said yes, we need to establish rules.

Establishing rules makes sure that everybody understands the game.

I need to ask "Where can I touch your body? Are we allowed to punch/ hit/ kick? Where on your body are you okay with that?"

Finally, we need to remind everyone that if someone breaks the rules, we need to stop playing the game.

If at any time during the game someone says "stop!", I stop what I'm doing and give them some space.

If I hurt a friend, I need to apologize. If someone gets hurt, the game is over.

Getting consent makes sure that my friends and I don't get in trouble, and that we respect each other's bodily autonomy
