THE DESCENDANTS

PREFACE.

THE object of this volume is to place in a permanent form for preservation the genealogical data of the families of Choates in this country that have sprung from the first settler of the name, John Choate, of Chebacco, Ipswich, in the Province of Massachusetts.

And also to make a memoranda of incident, tradition, and biography, including some special mention of those persons of eminence who by public service and distinguished ability have brought honor to the Choate name.

The endeavor has been, by an orderly arrangement, by illustrations representing persons, buildings, and scenery, and by a fine mechanical finish, to make a book at once valuable and attractive to all who are interested in the lineage and history of THE CHOATES IN AMERICA.

The author takes this opportunity to acknowledge the courtesy and the generous co-operation of a large number of town and city registrars, genealogists, and representatives of the different branches of the family, to whom he has applied for information and data, and without whose assistance the results embodied in this volume would have been impossible. Among others to whom he feels especially indebted for very essential help he begs leave to mention the following:—

Mrs. Abby P. Choate, of Essex, Mass.; Hon. Edward E. Pratt, Mr. Isaac B. Choate, Charles F. Choate, Esq., and Joshua M. Sears, Esq., of Boston, Mass.; Hon. Joseph H. Choate, of New York City; Mr. Leander Choate, of Oshkosh, Wis.; Hon. Charles A. Choate, of Jacksonville, Fla.; Mr. Alden Choate and Mrs. William F. Goldsmith, of Lynn, Mass.; Miss Hannah Choate, of Salem, Mass.; Mrs. Lydia G. Choate, of Woburn, Mass.; Mr. Charles Choate, of South Bridgton, Me., and Rufus Choate, Esq., of Essex, Mass. These are but a few of the many in this relation who might be named. The researches which have their culmination in these pages have extended over a period of more than ten years of persistent, laborious, and pleasurable effort. And if this volume shall prove an enduring monument to the name, the virtues, and the valuable service of this ancient family of Chebacco, and its descendants now scattered in all parts of America, the wish and the hope of its author will be abundantly realized.

INTRODUCTION.

WHEN Philip II. of Spain, in the year 1567, with a few strokes of his pen, doomed to death eighty thousand inhabitants of the Netherlands, how little he knew what he was doing. He did not foresee the results of this act of cruelty. He did not dream that the Duke of Alva's bloody work would sow the seeds of liberty on the eastern shores of England, and from thence, within a century, they would be scattered beyond the wide Atlantic.

These Hollanders, escaping the relentless grasp of the Inquisition, were liberty loving and industrious. They fled their lowland homes, across the waves, to make other homes, and under their persevering culture the fens of Eastern England became as gardens. And it is publicly claimed that nearly all the political institutions which are the glory of America came by them through England out of Holland.

While the early origin of the Choates is in obscurity, and while it is quite possible that at a still earlier period they were immigrants to Holland from France, yet it is highly probable that they crossed over from the Netherlands into the easterly parts of Britain with some of the numerous migrations of the sixteenth century, and were perhaps among those refugees who fled the Inquisition of the bloody court of Alva.

In their lowland homes, in the province of Brabant, they were known by the name of Van Choate, but it is thought that on account of English prejudice against Dutch immigrants, they were constrained on their arrival in the new country to drop the Van from their name, and thus obliterate at once a conspicuous symbol of their obnoxious origin, and henceforth in England and in America they have been known by the simple name of Choate. But to this day in and about Antwerp, and wherever in Holland they are found, the name is still Van Choate.

Their first settlement in England was doubtless near the boundary between Essex and Suffolk counties, in which region there are still resident many of the name. There is little doubt that from this part of England the immigrant John Choate came to this country about 1643, settled in Chebacco, Ipswich, in the Province of Massachusetts, and became the great ancestor of

THE CHOATES IN AMERICA.

How early immigrants by the name of Choate may have appeared in England is uncertain. The following are among the earliest traces that we have on record. In the ancient parish records of Finchingfield, Essex County, on deposit in the Register Office, London, it is said there is mention of those by the name of Choate as church wardens as early as 1500 A. D.

A century later and onward the name appears with some degree of frequency in the parish and church records of Hundon, Clare, County of Suffolk, and of Finchingfield, Birdbrooke, and Groton in the County of Essex.

In the Parish Register the Vicar of Hundon, Rev. Arthur Hamp, by a search made in 1892, found the following:—

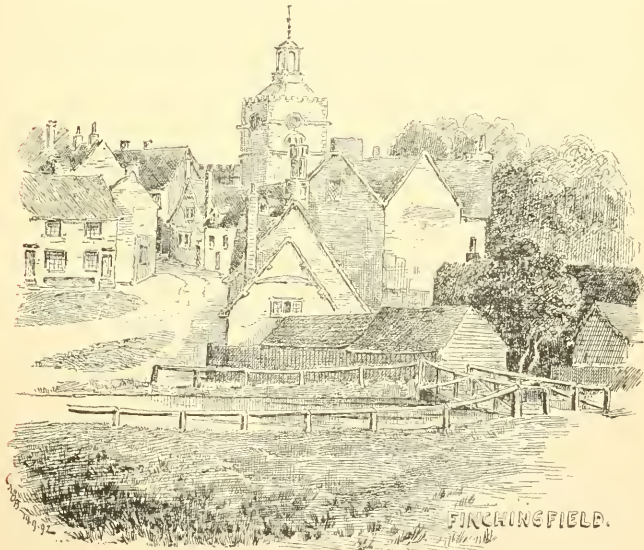

“1589 Elizabeth Choate filia of John Choate bap: Mar: 29th”

“1685 William Choate of Clare and Mary Arriss, widow of Hundon were married ye 7th day of february.”

“1776 Aug. 25 buried Robert son of John Choate.”

The Rev. Mr. Hamp writes: “Many pages of our registers are unreadable, owing to damp in past years, and many pages have been cut out wholly or in part.

“The Choates for several generations were residents of this ancient parish. But there are no longer any living representatives of the name to be found here. They have all retired to the city of the dead. The place is thus described:—

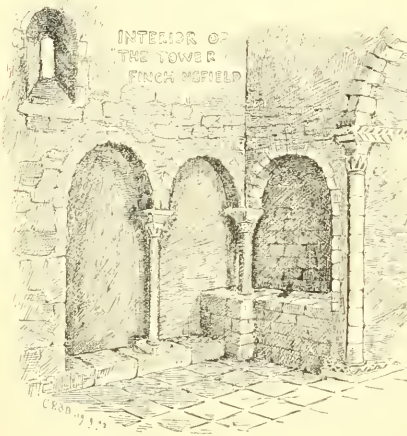

FINCHINGFIELD, ESSEX COUNTY, ENGLAND.

“The village of Finchingfield lies curiously, for in its centre the street runs sharply down to a brook which skirts the bottom of the village green. Nor does this village green resemble the ordinary type of such open spaces, for it lies on the side of an equally steep hill. Standing on the upper edge of the green you are about on a level with the churchyard on the opposite side of the little valley. In front of you are the irregularly-built houses, piled one on the other, and, topping them all, the old Norman tower of the church. Close by the church stand the quaint old timber-built almshouses, somewhat in the same position as the old school-house of Felstead. The houses at this end of Finchingfield are of some antiquity, and there is, moreover, at least one good specimen of hammered iron in the shape of an inn sign, the Green Man. But the church naturally claims the most particular notice, for it possesses a feature of its own, which will not be readily found elsewhere.

“The interior of the Norman tower has a most curious arcade upon each side of the Norman tower arch. This arcade does not completely surround the tower, but ceases along the north and south sides. It is a kind of architectural puzzle, of which the solution is yet doubtful. The west door of the tower has a fine Norman arch with a triple reveal and zigzag mouldings. Within the church is a fair oak screen and a number of monuments, of which one is very well worth notice. It is in the shape of an altar tomb, and bears upon its slab the effigies in brass of John Berners (1500) and his wife Elizabeth (1523), the daughter of Simon Wiseman. The costumes of these figures, though damaged, are full of interest. Round the base of the tomb are eight figures of ecclesiastics under canopies, and there are also eight escutcheons.

“The south porch is a fine one; it contains two good windows on each side, with a panel between them. Excellent, too, is the door of the porch, and it is only to be regretted that the two niches on the external buttresses of this most interesting porch should have suffered so much from weather and ill treatment.

“The remaining tombs in the church hardly possess any interest; the inscriptions are long thereon, and for the most part fulsome. It is not easy to get up a feeling of enthusiasm over a monument which records that a man “did by a voluntary constancy hold his peace for seven years.” But this, it appears, is what William Kemp, Esq., of Spains Hall, did. The inscription adds that he was “pious, just, hospitable and master of himself so much, that what others scarce doe by force and penalties,” etc.

“Finchingfield is quite a parish of small manors and old manor houses, all of which, save Spains Hall, have now degenerated into farm houses. Their names are curious and comprise, Justins Brent Hall, Sculpins, Petches or Peches, and Cornet or Cornish Hall, besides several others. Of these, Brent Hall was the property of Edward Benlowes, the poet, and was of course alienated by him, not however before he addressed thence some complimentary verses to his brother poet Quarles. Peches belonged to the Berners family, who appear to have held the land without a break from Norman times until 1729, when the male line had become extinct and a descendant of a daughter conveyed the manor to a Braintree apothecary. Of another estate in the neighborhood, formerly known as Boyton or Boynton, we find that two carucates of land there were anciently held by William de Reynes, by the serjeantry of keeping for the king five wolf-dogs."

The Register of the Parish Church in Finchingfield, which dates back to 1617, has among its earlier baptisms and burials the following, copied, in 1870, by William Coates, Parish Clerk:—

- "1621 John Choat son of John and Susannah bap: May 15"
- "1623 Annie Choat, daughter of Richard Choat bap: Feb'y 9th."
- "1625 Edmund Choat, son of John Choat bap: June 2d."
- "1632 John Choat, son of Edward buried Nov. 5th."
- "1637 Henry, son of Richard Choat buried June 11th."
- "1654 Elizabeth, daughter of John Choat buried Nov. 24th."
- "1664 John Choat buried Jan. 2d."
- "1669 Robert Choat Buried Aug. 16th."
- "1702 Edmund Choat Buried May 16th."

There have been numerous burials of Choates since the above in Finchingfield.

From the "Gleanings in England," by Mr. Waters, of Salem, Mass., are copied the following:—

"Matthew Choat has living of tenement in Birdbrooke, Co. Essex, that had been his brother Joseph's 25 Nov.' [10th Charles 1st Part No 5 Five Rolls]."

"Besides the above the names of John Choat and Joseph Choat, both of Co. Essex were noticed in the Calendar of Chancery England p. m. 7th Charles."

The Rector of Ridgewell, Essex County, England, writes:—

"The name of Choat is not found in the parish register until 1700 A. D., as subjoined:—

"A. D. 1700, John Choate elected at Parish meeting on Easter Monday as parish Constable."

"1784, Robert Choate of Norton elected Overseer and Assessor of Ridgewell."

MARRIED.

"1760 May 13, Henry Choate of Toppersfield to Elizabeth Frost of Ridgewell Essex Co. England."

BURIED.

"1776 Aug. 25 Robart, son of John Choat"

The Rev. Herbert Smith, Rector of Groton, Boxford, Colchester, England, copied from the parish records, and under date of Oct. 18, 1871, communicated to Rufus Choate, Esq., of Essex, Mass., the following items, viz. : —

"A. D. 1624 John Choate, son of Robert and Sarah Choate was baptized on the 6th of June."

"A. D. 1626 Elizabeth, the daughter of Robert Choate was baptized the 22<sup>d</sup> of January."

"1627 Elizabeth Choate only a year old was buried August 23<sup>d</sup>."

"1638 Robert Chote was buried August 18th and his wife Sarah Chote on the 12th of September in the same year."

The Rev. Mr. Smith adds the following : —

"I have looked through the oldest registers and there is no doubt but that John Choate was born here."

The above is confirmed by the following certified extract made by the present Rector of Groton, and received within a few weeks by the author : —

"From Register of Baptisms in the Parish of Groton in the County of Suffolk."

"1624 John Choate baptized the 6th of June."

"I certify the above to be a true extract from the Parish Register, as witness my hand this 6th day of May, 1896.

"JOHN W. WAYMAN, Rector of Groton."

The Rev. Henry Jacie of Aughton, Yorkshire, under date of June 12, 1633, writes to John Winthrop, Jun., and makes mention as follows : —

"To the Right worshipful, his much respected good Friend, Mr. John Winthrop, Jun. Esq., Son to the right worthy Governour of New England, these.

"Goodman Choate with his wife and goodman Bowhan (such a name), an honest simple poor man, a locksmith of Sudbury and goodman Bacon with his good wife of Barford (having divers young children) desire to have their service humbly remembered to Mr. Governour and desire his kind remembrance of them to pity their poor condition here and when he can to send for them, as it pleased him to say he would. They are filled with the contempt of the proud and their spirits are ready to sink and fail in them."

"HEN. JACIE"

"Aughton in Yorkshire June 12, 1633.

Mr. Savage, with the above in mind, says, "John Choate was probably of Sudbury, Suffolk County, England. Perhaps he was son of that Goodman Choat who in June, 1633, sent his regards to the governor, as conveyed by Rev. Henry Jacie, in a valuable letter of that date to the younger John."

Mr. Waters, of Salem, thinks the Choate family came from the northern part of Essex County, England.

Rufus Choate, Esq., the present proprietor of the ancient Choate homestead, on Choate Island, writes as follows:—

“The only definite statement concerning the early history of John Choate, which I know, I found among my grandfather, David Choate's, papers. He says that ‘John Choate came from the county of Kent, an apprentice to Mr. Low.’ My grandfather died in 1808, and was born only thirty years after John Choate's widow died, which would give some weight to his statement. The ‘Mr. Low’ referred to must have been Mr. Thomas Low, who came to Chebacco in 1643.”

Mr. Rufus Choate further suggests, “But if John Choate should be found to be from Kent County he may yet have been the Groton John Choate, who might have gone, after the death of his parents, in 1638, to live with some relative in Kent County until of a suitable age to embark for America.”

That John Choate came over as “an apprentice of Mr. Low” signifies that Mr. Low advanced the passage money for the young man. If “Mr. Low,” as suggested above, was Thomas Low, then he was the son of Capt. John Low, a navigator in those days. And if Captain Low's list of passengers could be found we might learn the name of the ship in which John Choate sailed and the exact date of his arrival in America.

Col John Choate appears mentioned in court records as the “grandson of Sergt. John Choate, who immigrated to this country from Sudbury, Suffolk, England, and died 1695.”

About the year 1870 Mr. Choate of Essex, Mass., had a diligent search made of registers in England, and carried on a somewhat vigorous and continued correspondence with various rectors of parishes, with a view to settle the birthplace and parentage of John Choate, who was the earliest of the name in this country. He received, also, interesting letters about that time from the only survivors of the Choates in Finchingfield, the Misses Harriet and Mary Choat, daughters of Joseph Choat, deceased, living in their old homestead, called “Peak's Farm.”

The author of these pages, on a visit of research to that vicinity in the fall of 1887, found that these last survivors of the name in Finchingfield had already passed away. He found, however, the name not uncommon in the surrounding towns, and had an interesting interview with a Mr. Joseph Choat and family, living in Bumpstead, county of Essex, a town a few miles from Finchingfield. This Mr. Joseph Choat he found a man of intelligence, living in a pleasant home, and engaged in a large business as a master contractor and builder, a man widely known, and spoken of with great respect in all the region.

The village in which Mr. Choat resided is called—

STEEPLE BUMPSTEAD.

This is a pretty village in the county of Essex, on the borders of Suffolk and Cambridgeshire, four miles from Haverhill, a manufacturing town on the Great Eastern Railway, three miles from Birdbrooke Station, on the Colne Valley Railway.

It is situated in a picturesque valley, and is approached by good roads from the villages around, of which it forms an important centre. Hempstead is within four miles; Finchingfield is not far away, and Birdbrooke is but two miles distant.

In this region are many persons of the name of Choat, and it may be a pleasure to the Choates in America to be introduced to one of their English cousins, who is presented on the following page.

Mr. Choate, since visited by the author in 1887, has retired from business, and removed from Steeple Bumpstead, and now resides at 16 Griffin Road, Plumstead, Kent County.

age of the Lord Chancellor, and incumbency of the Rev. Charles Meares Powell, A. M. The church was thoroughly restored in 1880.

The church in Steeple Bumpstead stands among the trees in the centre of the village. It is a well-proportioned building of stone, with a handsome tower, in which is a Jubilee clock showing four dials, and a fine peal of five bells. The church consists of nave, chancel, and two porches, and is rich in monuments and memorials of the departed great, who once occupied the residential seats in the parish, more especially those of the Bendyshe and Gent families. One is very elegant, and has a fine recumbent effigy of Sir Henry Bendyshe, the last male heir of the family.

The vicarage, valued in 1831 at £247, is in the patron-

CHURCH IN STEEPLE BUMPSTEAD.

There is found in the register of this church the following marriage: "Thomas Huckley and Emma Choate Sept 7th 1748."

Close to the village is one of the principal aristocratic residences of the district, known as Bower Hall. It is a fine old Queen Anne mansion, renovated and restored by the late Sir Henry Bendyshe, Bart., in 1710.

It is approached by carriage drive, with a lodge at the entrance, and has a prettily timbered and undulating park of nearly one hundred acres, with two sheets of ornamental water, and an almost matchless avenue of limes leading from the mansion to the church.

The pursuits of the inhabitants are principally agriculture and trade. The working men and their sons are employed chiefly in agriculture, and their wives and daughters obtain employment in finishing garments for the manufacturers of the neighboring town of Haverhill.

The place is favorable to health as proved by the longevity of its inhabitants. There are three persons of an average age of ninety-two years, sixteen between eighty and ninety, forty-five between seventy and eighty. This out of a population of only about a thousand people.

GROTON, BOXFORD, COLCHESTER, ENGLAND.

"BOXFORD is five miles from Sudbury, is situated in a fertile and highly-cultivated valley, between two brooks which unite a little below it. The parish contains ninety-nine houses (1818) and five hundred and thirty-six inhabitants. The town, consisting of several streets, carries on a considerable trade in malt, and has a manufactory for dressing sheep and deer skins. . . .

"The church is a spacious building, ninety-five feet long and fifty-two broad, and has a spire steeple. The porch on the south side is of stone; over the entrance are seven niches, with a number of inscriptions now nearly obliterated. The town contains also a few grammar schools founded by Queen Elizabeth."

Groton is a parish of Boxford, in the postal division of Colchester, from which place letters come by every mail.

Groton is a country place. The nearest railway station is seven miles away, in Sudbury. It is spoken of as follows:—

"Groton, formerly the Lordship of the Abbot of Bury. It was granted at the Dissolution of that Abbey to Adam Winthrop, Esq., in which family it continued till about the fourth year of Charles I. when it was purchased by Thomas Waring; it is now the seat of Thomas Waring, Esq."

Vid. Kerby's Suffolk Traveller, pp. 260, 261.

The inscription on the Winthrop Brass in Groton Chancel is as follows:—

" Here lyeth
Mr ADAM WINTHROP
Lorde and patron of Groton which Departed out of this worlde this ix day of November in the yere of oure Lorde God MCCCCCLXIV "

"The above plate, removed at some remote period . . . and long in the possession of his family in America, was restored in 1878 by the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop of Boston, in New England, his descendant in the eighth generation."

Vid. Suffolk Manorial Families, pp. 22, 24, 33.

The situation of the old Winthrop House, long since demolished, is marked by a mulberry tree, still standing, which is presented on the following page.

This tree now stands in an open field of grass, but stands where once was the garden of the "Old Winthrop Place." It is a solitary but interesting landmark, identifying the spot where were born two of the best known and most honored of the Colonial Governors of this ancient Commonwealth.

THE CHURCH IN GROTON, ENGLAND.

Photographed August, 1896.

This church, in which John Choate was baptized June 6, 1624, has stood for centuries. It is described by the present Rector, the Rev. John W. Wayman, who writes, under date of Aug. 13, 1896, from the Groton Rectory, Boxford, Colchester, as follows:—

“The church is a nice building, late Decorated style, except the tower, which is, perhaps, early English. The length of the nave is about forty-five feet, width thirty-six feet, height thirty feet, with two aisles same length and width, but not so high.

“The chancel is about twenty-seven feet long by fifteen feet wide, and contains two memorial windows, one east window and one in southeast, the gifts of the Winthrop family.

“The registers go back to 1562. The Winthrop tomb is outside the chancel, near the chancel door, the southeast side.”

This picture of the Groton church accompanied the Rector's description, and was received Aug. 21, 1896, just as this part of the book was going to press. The printers were reached by telephone and the picture inserted.

It remains to be said that by researches in Birdbrooke, Ridgewell, Steeple Bumpstead, and other places in the counties of Essex and Suffolk, nothing could be discovered which threw any new light upon the origin of the immigrant John Choate.

The lack of positive documentary proof leaves the matter undetermined, except so far as the sum of probabilities may warrant a conclusion. Such a conclusion is this, that the John Choate, the record of whose baptism is found in the register of Groton parish, Boxford, Colchester, England, under date of June 6, 1624 A. D., is identical with the young man, John Choate, who at the age of nineteen years came to America and settled in Chebacco, Ipswich, Province of Massachusetts. That his parents, who died in 1638, were doubtless those referred to as “Goodman Choat and his wife,” in Rev. Henry Jacie's letter, in 1633, to John Winthrop, Jun., of Ipswich, Mass. It was but natural that the lad, fourteen years of age at the time of his parents' death, having heard his father and mother talk over and plan for going to America, should, as soon as of sufficient age, himself set sail for the new country across the seas.

John Choate came to a place which had the Indian name of Agawam or Auagoan, and was described in 1614 by Capt. John Smith as follows:—

“Here are many rising hills and on their tops and descents are many corne fields and delightful groves.”

A plantation had been commenced at Agawam, under John Winthrop, Jun., by order of the Court of Assistants, and the name Ipswich given to it in 1634, “in acknowledgment of the great honor and kindness done to our people who took shipping there.” John Winthrop, Jun., purchased the whole region of an Indian sagamore for £20.

The southeasterly part of the town, including Hog Island, was known as Chebacco, that being the Indian name, or, as some one has suggested, a name derived from a certain style of vessels used in the Mediterranean Sea, called Xebecs or Chebecs, and vessels resembling these were built in this part of Ipswich, and so giving the name Chebacco to the place in which was the exclusive production of this kind of a vessel in America. This last accounting for the name seems at least far-fetched, if not anachronistic.

Chebacco became a distinct parish, called Chebacco Parish, Dec. 10, 1679, and was incorporated, Feb. 5, 1819, into a town by the name of Essex.

The earliest mention made of John Choate in the records of Ipswich, Mass., is in 1648, when the name of John Choate, at the age of twenty-four years, appears in a list of one hundred and sixty one persons who subscribed to a fund to pay Major Daniel Denison for giving military instruction. Hence he was called “a subscriber to the Denison allowance.” The Probate Court files in Salem, Mass., show that Mr. Choate was forty years old in 1664, which is confirmatory of his birth as recorded in 1624.

John Choate, on arrival, soon found employment in Chebacco, and, by industry and frugality, in a few years he acquired the means to purchase a small farm near the border line between Ipswich and Chebacco, located at the head of the creek.

Mr. Choate's house stood a few rods northeast of the residence recently occupied by Mr. John Low. For many years it was well known as "The Choate Place," and was inherited successively by his son, Joseph Choate, and his grandson, Daniel Choate. But in later years the old house was torn down, and the farm became merged in others adjacent to it, so that to-day the spot on which John Choate's house once stood is pointed out with some difficulty even by the oldest inhabitants of the neighborhood, for nothing remains to mark approximately the location except a well on the opposite side of the road.

The name of Choate, thus brought from England to America and established among the early names of Ipswich, has varied but slightly in its spelling, sometimes being written Chote, more often, as in England, Choat, but never Chute. For the Choates and the Chutes in this country are distinct families, having different ancestors, the Chutes descending from Lionel Chute, who appears a commoner as early as 1641, in Ipswich, Mass., from Dedham, Essex County, England, and the Choates from John Choate, as stated above.

We find that the first settler spelled his own name Chote, Choat, and Choate at different periods in his life, but never spelled it Chute. We find that none of his descendants have ever confounded or used the names Choate and Chute interchangeably. The names Chewte, Choot, Shoat, Schoat, and Shoatt are doubtless corruptions of Chute.

It is true that Lower's Patronymica Britannica gives "Choat as probably the same with Chute, a family name of some distinction." But it must be said that if this is so it could have been true only at a very remote time. Mr. Rufus Choate, of Essex, expressly writes: "I found them to be separate families previous to the siege of Boulogne, when Philip Chute won the coat-of-arms. That siege ended with the capture of Boulogne, Sept. 14, 1544. Chute was promoted for bravery and received the canton with the 'Lion' of England."

It is the unanimous judgment of those in both families who have made the fullest investigations that for at least three or four hundred years the Choates and Chutes have been entirely distinct families, and that the Choates have no right to the Chute coat-of-arms.

In England they were a rural people, illustrious, if at all, for their simple virtues of heart and life, which too rarely receive honor, save from God only.

"In consequence of the loss of the early Church Records, and the great deficiency in the town records of Ipswich, a full and accurate genealogy of any family in that town is impracticable. The following account of John Choate, Sr., is therefore obviously imperfect."

The above remark prefaces an old Family Record by some unknown writer, and is quoted here as a true statement, which must explain many apparent deficiencies of data in the present volume.

Memoranda.

JOHN CHOATE, a young man of nineteen years, came to this country in 1643 from England. The materials from which to construct any considerable sketch of his life are wanting. We know, however, that he was a pioneer settler in a new country, whose first work was to clear away the forests, drain the meadows, and provide for himself a homestead.

Mr. Choate married about 1660 and settled upon a small farm which he had purchased, and which he paid for, as the record runs: "In cattle not over eight years old: In grain English and Indian and partly in West India goods."

As the years went on he added by purchase to his landed possessions, until he had become the proprietor of two or three farms adjacent to his own. As early as 1667 he commenced buying the shares of common lands which had been allotted to the proprietors of the town. These were located on an island, about two miles away, in full view from where Mr. Choate lived. The island embraced about three hundred acres, constituting a swell of land, the form of which bore some resemblance to the back of a large hog lying asleep on the surrounding waters.

These sea-girt lands were wild, covered with trees and bushes. This island, either from its shape, or because used as a common pasture for swine, or for some unknown reason, since as early as 1637 had been called "Hog Island." Mr. Choate, as opportunity offered, bought, one by one, these shares of the common lands until, in 1690, he was almost the sole owner of the island. The earliest deed of conveyance, now extant, was given in 1678, when he purchased the very spot on which stands the present Choate house, the birth-place of the late Hon. Rufus Choate of Boston. Thus this early settler of Chebacco, by his industry, made his mark as a thrifty farmer, and as his sons came to manhood he was able to give to each a farm, excepting the youngest, Benjamin, for whom he provided the means of a college education. Mr. Choate for more than half a century lived among his neighbors a worthy example of industry and thrift. What part he took in public affairs we know but little. It is recorded that he became a freeman, by oath, in 1667, held the rank of sergeant in the militia, and that he was a voter by virtue of his membership in a Congregational Church.

From certain entries on the records, various depositions and law papers, he appears to have had more or less to do with the courts of his day, sometimes being himself arraigned for trial, and sometimes being called to testify as a witness, as, for example, when charged with the theft of Mr. Hubbard's apples, or to bear witness, as in the case of "Rachel Clentons," who was charged with being a witch.

One of his surviving descendants and the present proprietor of some of his real estate ventures to say: "It may be divulging a secret which the 'great world' ought not to know, to state that John Choate, the immigrant, was a hard case, and nobody but a clergyman could handle him. He was tried for stealing apples in 1651, but triumphantly acquitted; he was arraigned for lying in 1657 but the charge was disproved, and in 1659 he was brought before the court for refusing to assist the marshal in making an arrest, but made good his defence. The only thing to be said of him in such connections is, that his wits and brains were largely exercised in getting himself out of his law scrapes, and that he seems to have stamped his personality upon his descendants to such a degree, that large numbers of them have taken to the law as naturally as ducks take to the water."

It is thought wise to insert here, somewhat in detail, the quaint literature which pertains to the great ancestor of the Choates in this country. These papers consist of certain depositions read in court concerning him, the record of his testimony given in a law case, his last will and testament, and the mutual action of his heirs in setting aside the said will. These ancient documents may be of interest as curiosities to many of his widely-scattered descendants, now living and yet to be born, to whom the original papers may not be accessible. They are as follows:—

THE DEPOSITION OF JOSEPH LANKTON IN THE JOHN CHOATE STEALING CASE,
MAY, 1651.

"This deponent saith, That as he was going to the general training at Charlestown, Theophilus Salter, John Choate and John Burke, wee went together and as we was going betwixt this and Mr. Hubbard's farme, Theophilus Salter fell a speaking how than when he came to Mr. Hubbards farme he would have apples enough for he said he had leave of Mrs. Hubbard to gather as many as he would under half a bushell and he might take what he would, Mrs. Hubbard and he was all one and shee would be glad if he would work for them. When we came to the farm he said whosoever would go in with him he would bear him out in it though it cost him £10 or £20. Through much persuasion he persuaded John Choate to go in saying he had leave from Mrs. Hubbard aforesaid to gather what he would under half a bushell of apples and he would bear him out in it, and said he Joseph Bixby is my witness and upon these words John Choate did venture to go over."

THE DEPOSITION OF SAMUEL AYRES IN THE JOHN CHOATE STEALING CASE, 26 MAY, 1651.

"This deponent being at the General Training in Charlestown. Theophilus Salter asked me whether he called at Mr. Hubbard's farme or no, ye I told him ye I told him y<sup>t</sup> I did not call at Mr. Hubbard's farm. Then he told me they had got some apples at Mr. Hubbard's farm, and he told me y<sup>t</sup> he had leave of Mr. Hubbard to take as many as he would under half a bushel and he told me that he spoke to John Chote to go into Mr. Hubbard's orchard. John Choate told him that he was affraid that he had no liberty of Mr. Hubbard to take any apples and he was affraid y<sup>t</sup> if he should go into the orchard there would come trouble thereby, — and at last he persuaded him to go over into the orchard and told him that he would leave him harmless whatsoever it did cost him, though it cost him ten or twenty pounds, and he made him accompt to — to have a round lot when he came back again if they were not gathered."

DEPOSITION OF JOSEPH FOWLER IN THE JOHN CHOATE STEALING CASE, 1651.

"This deponent saith — he heard Theophilus Salter say that he would bear out John Chot in taking the apples at Mr. Hubbard's orchard, and that he had leave to take under half a bushell and that Mr. Hubbard and he was all one for he was to work for him. She did not care how many he took for she should be glad if he would work them out. Further more he said that he had much adoo to get John Chot to do it, but he could hardly believe Mr. Hubbard gave him leave, till I told him that Joseph Bixby would witness it for he said Misses Hubbard gave him leave when Joseph Bixby was with him."

THE DEPOSITION OF JOHN CHOATE.

"The Testimony of John Choate aged about 48 years saith — That I did see Mr. Joseph Cook and the Marshall of Cambridge to have away a colt through my yard that John Hales formerly replevined out of the hands of the said Cooke, being under attachment.

"This replevin was to Ipswich court."

THOMAS MARSHALL."

The heirs of John Choate, Sr., in setting aside his last will, state themselves as follows:—

"WHEREAS by the Will of John Choate deceased there are several parcels of lands & estate settled upon John his eldest son & Samuel & Joseph & Benjamin, yet, Thomas notwithstanding what has been given him in a deed of gift is not mentioned, nor confirmed in said will, John accounting his part short of a double portion, the rest not being well satisfied, especially Anne, the relict of John Choate. "Further — it is mutually agreed that Benjamin shall receive the yearly income of his brother Joseph's land till he comes of age, and other payments as before inserted until he Commences Bachelor of Arts or might have done it, if he remained at his learning, and the land given him by his father's will may be sold for the bringing to and at the College if need be, and if Joseph or Benjamin or both decease before they come of age of twenty one years, the land that shall then remain unsold shall be divided to the brothers viz: To John a double, and to, each other male heir of said Choate's children a single share and if sold to have it forever.

"It is further agreed and each doth for themselves and in behalf forever a quit claim make each other, and their respective heirs and assigns of all the estate real and personal of said John Choate, deceased estate, giving and granting to each the respective share inserted, to have and to hold to them as it is prefixed to them without let or hindrance, molestation or interruption, suit or demand of us ourselves, our heirs, executors, administrators or assigns.

"In Testimony hereof we have affixed our hands and seals this 14th day of May, Anno Domini 1697

                   JOHN CHOATE     [SEAL]
                   SAMUEL CHOATE   [SEAL]
                   THOMAS CHOATE   [SEAL]
                   ANNE CHOATE     [SEAL]
                   as Guardian for 3<sup>d</sup>.
                   JOSEPH & BENJAMIN CHOATE."

The estate was settled satisfactorily on the basis of this agreement. Since no mention is made in these documents of Mary Choate, a daughter, it is probable that she had died in early life prior to 1691.

Mrs. Margaret Fitts appears in the will, but not in the agreement, for she had died in 1692.

Thomas Choate is not mentioned in his father's will, doubtless because he had already received by deed all to which he was entitled, but his name appears in the agreement of 1697.

Mrs. Anne Choate survived her husband more than thirty years. She receives but little mention. Her maiden name, birthplace, and parentage are unknown. It is said, however, that in some ancient court papers her name appears illegibly written, and seems to be "Arramas." She was doubtless a very estimable woman, a good wife and mother. She joined the church in full communion December, 1673. Mr. Choate in his will calls her "My dear and beloved wife, Anne Choate," and names her as "my sole executrix." Mrs. Choate "died Feb<sup>y</sup> y<sup>e</sup> 16, 1727 upwards of 90."

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE was chosen in 1702 a selectman of the town, and in 1712 a deacon of the church in Chebacco, of which the Rev. John Wise was the pastor, and he continued in the office of deacon until his death. He was a man who took an active part in town and church affairs and was universally esteemed in the community. His house stood on that part of the old Choate homestead which in recent years has been owned and cultivated by Messrs. George E. and William Cogswell.

Elizabeth Graves, who became Mr. Choate's first wife, was the youngest of four children. Samuel was born Aug. 5, 1658, and died Nov. 22, 1679; John was born Aug. 1, 1660, and her only sister, Hannah, was born Dec. 19, 1663. Samuel Graves, her father, was born in 1624.

Mrs. Elizabeth Giddings, Mr. Choate's second wife, was the widow of Thomas, son of George and Jane (Lawrence) Giddings. Jane Lawrence was the daughter of Mrs. Jone (Antrobas) Lawrence, whose second husband was John Tuttle.

Thomas Giddings first married, Feb. 23, 1668, Mary Goodhue, daughter of William and Margery (Watson) Goodhue, and had three children, viz., Mary, Thomas, and William. By his second wife, Elizabeth, Mr. Giddings had two children, Jane, who married Joseph Hart, and Dorothy, who married William Brown. Herbert Hoffman Crain, resident of Key West, Fla., and more recently of Albany, Ga., is a descendant of Joseph and Jane (Giddings) Hart. Mary Giddings, daughter of Thomas and Mary (Goodhue) Giddings, married Thomas Manning, and was an ancestress of the distinguished author, Nathaniel Hawthorne.

Among the most ancient gravestones standing in the old cemetery in Essex, Mass., are those of the four sons of John and Elizabeth (Giddings) Choate, who all died of fever within five weeks, between the ages of seventeen and twenty-four years.

Ebenezer Choate [15], who died in early manhood, in his will remembers his betrothed in the following item: "To my dear and well beloved Mrs. Mary Cogswell, daughter of Capt. Jonathan Cogswell, £30, of which £14 to purchase mourning." She not long after married her cousin, William Cogswell.

Vid. The Cogswells in America, p. 25.

THE CHURCH IN CHEBACCO, of which Mr. Choate was a deacon, was organized Sept. 6, 1681, and the Rev. John Wise, son of Joseph Wise, of Roxbury, Mass., was settled Aug. 12, 1683, as its first pastor. Rev. Mr. Wise won a great notoriety a few years later, which to-day renders his name illustrious. On occasion, Aug. 23, 1687, he made a bold and impressive speech against the unjust taxation of the American province, and to him belongs the honor, it is said, of being the first man in America to oppose taxation without representation. He was then thirty-six years of age, having the fire of youth and the wisdom of manhood. Mr. Wise was arrested, found guilty, and sentenced to jail for twenty-one days in Boston, and fined £50 for his disloyal utterances. He was also suspended from the ministerial office. But afterward he recovered damages by action against Chief Justice Dudley for denying him the privileges of the Habeas Corpus Act. He died April 8, 1725, aged seventy-three years.

Memoranda.

SAMUEL CHOATE is mentioned as a "husbandman of Ipswich, Mass."

Mrs. Choate, daughter of Stephen Williams, was a granddaughter of Robert and Elizabeth (Stratton) Williams. Robert Williams came from Norwich, England, and settled, 1638, in Roxbury, Mass. Mrs. Choate was an own cousin of the Rev. John Williams, settled in 1686, the first minister in Deerfield, Mass., whose wife was the daughter of Rev. Eleazar Mather, of Northampton, Mass. At the time Deerfield was burned, Feb. 29, 1704, by the Indians, Rev. Mr. Williams, his wife and five children, were captured by the savages. Mrs. Williams was cruelly tomahawked, and Mr. Williams carried into captivity. Am. Quart. Register, Vol. 10, p. 268.

Soon after the Rev. Mr. Williams was carried away, Benjamin Choate, A. B. [9], was sent by the General Court to officiate as Chaplain of the garrison in Deerfield. The Rev. Mr. Williams, on his return from captivity, in 1711, preached to his people from the following text: "Return unto thine own house and show how great things God hath done for thee." — LUKE viii. 39.

Stephen Williams, Mrs. Choate's father, was born Nov. 8, 1640, in Roxbury, Mass. He married, about 1666, Sarah Wise, daughter of Joseph and Mary (Thompson) Wise, and sister of Rev. John Wise. She was born Dec. 26, 1647. They resided in Roxbury, Mass., where Mr. Williams died, Feb. 15, 1720.

Vid. N. E. H. G. R., Vol. 36, pp. 277-8.

"There is an old tradition concerning two brothers, John and Samuel Choate. These two brothers started on a voyage together, and it was not fully decided who was Captain. Sam, however, took the position and ordered all sail on to the vessel; John remonstrated, as the wind was fresh, and addressed Samuel, not as Captain, but as 'Sam'; but Sam was firm, while the wind increased almost to a gale. The position was fast becoming dangerous, until at length John, with his hat under his arm and with a low bow to Samuel, said: 'CAPTAIN CHOATE, won't you please to take in some of this sail?' The contest was over, and Samuel being acknowledged Captain, orders were instantly given to reef, or take in sail."

It is probable that the John and Samuel Choate mentioned were the sons of John Choate, immigrant, and if so the acknowledged "Captain Choate" was Samuel Choate, who married Mary Williams.

MARCH 30, 1713. Samuel Choate's estate was divided thus: "To his widow Mary, one third £33:0:4; to Samuel two shares £14:13:5; to Sarah, Mary, Stephen William, Elizabeth, Margaret, John, £7:6:9; each."

"Samuel Story pub. to wid<sup>o</sup>. Mary Choate 16:7:1716." Vid. Ipswich Records.

Deborah Williams, a cousin of Mrs. Mary (Williams) Choate and daughter of her Uncle, Samuel Williams, married Joseph Warren, whose grandson was the heroic Gen. Joseph Warren, who fell in the Battle of Bunker Hill.

Rev. John Wise, whose sister married Stephen Williams, the father of Mrs. Mary (Williams) Choate, was of like spirit with General Warren, the former in defying Sir Edmund Andros, and the latter in defying King George the Third.

General Warren was a great-grandson of the noted Robert Calef, whose book entitled "More Wonders of the Invisible World," helped greatly to dispel the witchcraft delusion of 1692.

Robert Calef was the father of Dr. Joseph Calef, whose widow, Mrs. Mary Calef, became the second wife of Thomas Choate[6], son of John Choate, the immigrant.

The Probate records at Salem are voluminous in Choate data. From them are the following extracts:—

"Adm. on estate of Samuel Choate yeoman of Ipswich, decd., intestate, granted 30 Mch 1713 to widow Mary." There is mention of young children, as follows: "Eldest Son, Samuel, Sarah, Mary, Stephen, William, Eliz<sup>a</sup> Margaret & John. Inventory taken 26 July 1713. Total R. E. £200 consisting of house yard well & garden, 1 acre orchard & 27 acres land. Pers. est. £56-13s." The estate was settled on the eldest son, Samuel, who was to pay his brothers and sisters their respective shares. The son, Stephen, received his share, £6, 13s. 5d., July 24, 1722. The same amount with interest was paid April 9, 1722, to Mary (Choate) Story, wife of Solomon Story; also the same amount to "John Story for his wife Sarah, formerly Sarah Choate." Nov. 21, 1724, William Choate gave receipt for £8, 13s. 6d. as his share. Oct. 22, 1726, Stephen Choate gave receipt for £6, 13s. 5d. and interest as his share. Dec. 6, 1737, Stephen Choate gave quitclaim to any interest in estate in consideration of £7, paid by his brother Samuel. Stephen was then of Dorchester and a "husbandman." He seems to have gotten the "lion's share."

In Essex Probate Records Pelatiah Fitch receipts in full, "in behalfe of my wife who was formerly Eliz<sup>a</sup> Choate," to her brother Samuel. William Choate may have been dead at the time of the settlement of his father's estate, as there exists no receipt for his share of the estate. He was doubtless living Oct. 15, 1716, as Samuel gave bond to pay "William" with the others.

Memoranda.

THOMAS CHOATE, the third son of John Choate, the immigrant, has been characterized by one of his descendants as "a spruce young man." It has been already mentioned that by a gift from his father he became sole proprietor of the lands on "Hog Island."

At the age of nineteen years, in 1690, he married a young lady whose mother is famous in history as a leader among those Chebacco women who were quite equal to the raising the first meeting-house in the spring of 1679, from which their husbands had desisted, by order of the General Court, when the sills were already laid. "Like mother like daughter." This young couple were the first white settlers on the Island. Theirs was a pioneer life; they must have grappled with many difficulties and hardships in establishing for themselves a home, in subduing the lands to fertility, and in rearing their large family of children.

Mr. Choate was well endowed with natural gifts, a man of strong mind and quick perceptions. He has been called a "great farmer," but he was that, and much more. His abilities and wide information, for those times, made him a great power in the town and in public affairs. He was a leading citizen of Ipswich, and only one town stood between Ipswich and Boston, which was Salem. Mr. Choate's prominence was recognized by the people. He was their representative to the General Court for four years, 1723-24-25 and '27.

His sentiments upon the public questions of that day were well considered, and had the quality of sound sense and good judgment. Even so long ago the matters of currency and depression in business were of pressing importance in public thought and legislation. Mr. Choate, as early as 1728, gave utterance to ideas upon currency which would do credit to the broader intelligence of to-day.

He said: "The increase of currency in bills of credit, as a remedy for depression in trade and depreciated bills already in circulation is like seeking to restore a corrupt state of the blood by high living."

Mr. Choate came to be popularly known as "The Governor," or "Governor Choate." This for what reason we may not divine, save perhaps his sole proprietorship and supremacy over "Hog Island," unless it was because of these qualities of leadership and command which marked him as a man fitted for the chief magistracy of a State. There is a tradition, unsupported, however, by any proof of its truth, that the people of the Province being dissatisfied with their Governor, the majority of the votes of Ipswich were cast one year for Thomas Choate.

Mr. Choate was a man of great industry and energy, a little rough, according to some traditions, but well fitted for pioneer life. He was a warm friend and firm supporter of the Rev. John Wise, his minister, and in later life his near neighbor. He was one of the thirty-one men who signed Rev. Mr. Wise's letter in behalf of John Proctor, who was condemned for witchcraft. Mr. Choate was one of the witnesses to the will of this unfortunate man, which was written in Salem jail while the manacles were on Proctor's wrists, only three days before his execution. This will is still in existence, and shows that Mr. Choate was not a little excited, for he never signed his name afterward with such a flourish.

Mr. Choate lived on "The Island" for thirty-five years; he reared there a noble family. One of his daughters became the wife of a minister, one of his sons a ruling elder, and another was scarcely less distinguished in law and in state, for his day, than was a later descendant, the Hon. Rufus Choate, of Boston.

Mr. Choate, in 1725, removed to the main land, to what was known as the "John Burnham Place." Mr. Choate had become possessed of a large landed property. He owned two farms on the island, the Randall Andrews farm in Ipswich, a farm of four hundred acres in Rockport, on the coast near Thatcher's Island, a farm in the West Parish, one on Jeffrey's Neck, and the farm to which he had removed, making seven in all. It was sometimes said of him, "The Governor is a good man but evidently trying to carry too much of this world's goods."

A descendant, and the present proprietor of his home estate on the Island, writes, "That, because of the great earthquake in October, 1727, which gave him such a shaking up, or for some other reason, unknown to the writer, the Governor dropped three of his farms, giving them all away in a single day to his three oldest sons; the home farm on "The Island" to his son Francis, the one afterward known as the "Marshall farm" to his son Thomas, and the Randall Andrews farm in Ipswich to his son John. Subsequently he gave away the remainder of his real estate, and for some years he tilled a forty-acre lot lying between Chebacco and Ipswich, which he rented for a term of years of Joseph Thompson, of the Inner Temple, London, England. About the time the lease was to expire Mr. Choate died. This lot of land was known for many years as "Choate's Forty Acres."

Thomas Choate's old home farm on the island is the only one of the dozen or more Choate farms that has continued, and still remains, in the possession of a descendant of John Choate, the immigrant.

Mrs. Mary (Varney) Choate, Mr. Choate's first wife, as already mentioned, was the daughter of "Madam Varney," the leader of a party of women who secured the raising of a meeting-house in Chebacco, which the "Great and General Court" of the Province had forbidden to be erected by the Chebacco men. The quick-witted women did not see why this order should forbid other men, living in places outside of Chebacco, from carrying out the popular wish, and so Madam Varney mounted the old family mare and sped her way through Gloucester and Manchester, and invited the men of these places to the meeting-house raising. This project was carried out by the women of Chebacco without the knowledge of their husbands, and at the time appointed the force from the neighboring towns was on the ground and the timbers quickly flew into their places, and before that afternoon's sun went down there stood the frame of the first meeting-house in Chebacco, in all its glory, against the sunset sky.

Madam Varney and her coadjutors were arraigned before the Court in Salem, to answer for their contempt of "the powers that be," but were finally discharged on the acknowledgment of their offence. And the meeting-house was completed to the glory of God, and, no doubt, to the no small glory of the Chebacco women.

Mrs. Mary (Varney) Choate was a niece of John Proctor, who was executed Aug. 19, 1692, for witchcraft. She was a sister to Abigail Varney, who married, July 12, 1687, Josiah Burnham, son of John Burnham, immigrant, and the grandfather of Abraham Burnham (Josiah<sup>3</sup>, Josiah<sup>2</sup>, John<sup>1</sup>), who married Feb. 11, 1762, Mary Perkins, and they became the parents of Hannah Burnham, who married, Oct. 7, 1788, Daniel Jameson, of Dunbarton, N. H. Daniel and Hannah (Burnham) Jameson were the parents of Daniel Jameson, who married, Oct. 3, 1824, Mary Twiss, and the grandparents of the author of this volume, who married, Sept. 20, 1858, Mary Cogswell, daughter of the Rev. William Cogswell, D. D., of Boston, Mass.

Mrs. Mary (Calef) Choate's first husband, Joseph Calef, son of Robert Calef, of Roxbury, was a physician. He died Dec. 28, 1707, aged thirty-six years.

Mrs. Hannah Burnham, who became the third wife of Thomas Choate, may have been the widow of Thomas<sup>3</sup> (John<sup>2</sup>, John<sup>1</sup>) Burnham, and the daughter of John and Hannah (Goodhue) Cogswell.

SLAVERY.

The first mention of negro slavery in connection with the Choate family occurs as follows: "July 30, 1714. A negro boy, who had been bought by Thomas Choate of Hogg Island of one Joseph Norwood of Gloucester and sold to Jonathan Bunker of Charlestown."

Then Thomas Choate, while a member of the General Court, bought on Long Wharf, Boston, for his son, Francis Choate, a negro boy just arrived from Africa, by the name of "Ned." He was about eighteen years of age when purchased. He subsequently married the girl Sabina, or "Binah," as she was called, a negress for whom one "Phillis" was exchanged with Robert Choate, of Ipswich. Vid. Bill of Sale. Ned and 'Binah had seven children, all of whom were baptized, as Ned was a member of the church. Their names were Edward, Titus, Peter, Cæzar, Jane, Violet, and Peggy. Edward went to Leicester, Mass., with Isaac Choate; Peter was sold to John Choate, Esq.; Titus and Cæzar remained with the family; Jane and Violet, when girls, took cold by sleeping in the barn after a famous husking, and died. They lie buried in the corner of a field near some large rocks, the only burials on the Island except those of Indians. "Uncle Ned" remained with Esquire Francis Choate after "The Governor," Thomas Choate, removed to the main land to a house which stood next to the one now occupied by Mrs. Abby P. Choate. He lived to be full ninety years of age, and died in 1800. "Ned and 'Binah" remained slaves until 1845, when Mr. Francis Choate gave them their freedom if they wished to take it, otherwise they were to be supported. They chose to remain with the family, and accordingly were cared for as long as they lived.

CHOATE ISLAND.

This picture presents a scene of no common natural beauty, showing an expansive water-front, attractive for boating, and in the distant background an island at once picturesque and historic.

It is indeed difficult to divine why this island, a place so "beautiful for situation" and so identified with the history of the Choate family, should have borne, for a period of two hundred and fifty years, a name so singularly uncouth as "Hog Island."

But the time came at last when this Island home of the Choates should be rechristened and receive its appropriate name. It was on a lovely October day in 1887, when the brilliancy of the foliage and the beauty of the scene were surpassingly fine and inspiring, that there was an imaginary gathering of the descendants of the so-called "Governor Choate," proprietor and first settler on the Island in 1690, and it was unanimously voted and declared, with the consent of the present owners, that this island, so romantic and sacred in family history and association, should thereafter be named and known as CHOATE ISLAND; and it was so entered, by order of the selectmen, upon the Town Records.

AT CHOATE ISLAND.

From human lives some tender sentiments
 Attach themselves to the unconscious earth,
 As pilgrims, over seas and continents,
 We visit spots where genius has had birth.

Thus do we come to where Chebacco sleeps
 In reedy bed, and dreams the livelong day,
 Or with an idle current slowly creeps
 To meet the coming tide from Ipswich Bay.

Just level with the waters at their height
 The marsh spreads inland as a sea of grass,
 Here blue and green make up a picture bright
 As Holland etching on a plate of glass.

These long, low dunes that line the curving shore,
 White with their drifting sand as crests of foam,
 Where break the billows with unceasing roar,
 Remind us of our earlier Anglian home.

Like those long forelands off the eastern shore
 Of England's Essex on the German Sea,
 These strips of shifting sands stretch out before
 The broads and fens within their sheltering lee.

We scan the lines that undergo no change,
 Where from the sodden marsh grey ledges rise,
 Where distant hills stand marshalled into range
 And with their rounded summits notch the skies.

Half from the marshy fen, half from the tide,
 In front Choate Island rises steep and bold;
 Its treeless summit and its rocky side
 Against that northern sky show bleak and cold.

We note the rugged features of this scene,
 Its harmonies of color and of tone,
 Its sloping fields of grasses, vivid green,
 Enclosed by walls of yellow-lichened stone.

Below that wall which clammers up the steep,
 Upon its sunny side and towards the waves,
 Some loose-piled boulders faithful watching keep
 To guard the sacredness of kindred graves.

Beneath the shelter of that low green mound —
 Their early fate all unforgotten yet —
 Sleep on in death's long dreamless slumber sound,
 The two slave sisters, Jane and Violet.

Upon this slope the ancient farmhouse stands,
 Its beams and rafters true in every line.
 Built for the centuries by honest hands
 In Puritanic plainness of design.

It looks across the river and the bay,
 Looks off between the Loaf and Castle Neck,
 Dauntless as when the British frigate lay
 With guns trained on it from her forward deck.

That splintered post riven by the lightning's stroke, —
 Of all that household there was injured none, —
 Upholding through the years huge beams of oak,
 Stands witness to God's sparing mercy shown.

Built in the reign of England's George the First,
 For one half century a Colonial home,
 In arts of housewifery precisely versed,
 Its inmates plied the spindle, reel, and loom.

A fair bride once, in this quaint, low-ceiled room,
 Of disappointment giving not one hint,
 While wind and tide bound the impatient groom,
 Spun on her bridal day her wonted stint.

From out these narrow panes have youthful eyes
 Looked on a world all beautiful and bright,
 Have watched for stars to come in evening skies,
 Watched for the flashing of Shoals Island light;

Have watched gnarled oaks, the forest's ancient pride,
 And seen them shaped to keel, to ribs and knees;
 Have seen the tapering pine bear canvas wide
 As sailed "the bankers" out to open seas.

Here was the "Neptune" welcomed by the tide
 To lead the timid "Dove" through breakers' foam;
 And proud the white-winged "Swan" rode by their side,
 A group of "Graces" from their island home.

To those keen eyes, so early trained to scan
 This open sky for flight of brant or loon,
 It was a path with silver paved that ran
 Across the sea beneath the rising moon.

More fair than flowers can paint a path on earth,
 More bright than any sparkling on the sea,
 Must be the way that tempts a soul to birth,
 That leads it into life's dread mystery.

Through what transcendent glories once a child
 Came to life's margin at this lonely spot,
 With what companionship he was beguiled,
 Is only known from shining gifts he brought.

His was the power to sway the minds of men,
 It seemed the art from Hermes had been caught
 To shame Amphion with the tongue and pen,
 To serve as the interpreter of Thought.

CHOATE ISLAND consists of three hundred acres of land, rising from all sides to a central prominence commanding a fine view of the mainland and inland towns dotting the country for miles away, and giving also a grand outlook oceanward. It is somewhat abrupt, bold and rocky on its northern side, but sloping gently on the east and south to the water's edge.

It was sold by the Indians to the town of Ipswich, and reluctantly yielded as the last place to be abandoned by the red men, forced to retire from the region before the pale face of civilization. It was a dear and sacred spot to the Indians, because on its lower side, slightly elevated from the waters of river and ocean, which ceaselessly ebb and flow, was their ancient burial-place. This burial-ground is still pointed out on a beautiful knoll at the northern end of that part of the island now owned by Lamont G. Burnham, Esq. It is said that in September, 1633, there came to the Ipswich River forty birch canoes filled with Tarrentines with the intention of cutting off the whites who had just settled there. But a friendly Agawam revealed the plot, and the infant colony was saved. Whoever looks upon the scene of landscape, rivers, and ocean can understand why the Indians were reluctant to relinquish it.

"The Island" continued to be held by the town as common land until about 1665, when it was voted to divide it into lots of three and a half acres each, and distribute them to the citizens. These lots, more or less of them, were soon in the market for sale. John Choate, the immigrant, had his eye upon these attractive lands, which were in full view of his cottage door, and he purchased of one and another of his fellow townsmen their lots, until in the course of twenty years or more "The Island," by virtue of ownership, might have been christened Choate Island two hundred years sooner than was the actual fact.

Thomas Choate, with his young and beautiful bride, in 1690 set up housekeeping across the creek, and were the first white settlers of the Island. And in July of that year Sergeant Choate, his father, now along in years, surrendered all his rights and title to lands on "The Island" to his son Thomas, who thus became sole proprietor of almost their entire extent, and for this reason, if for no other, it is not strange that he should receive the distinction of being called "Governor." Some years later Mr. Benjamin Proctor, a relative, perhaps an uncle, of Mrs. Choate, purchased of Mr. Choate the more northerly part of the island, which remained in the Proctor family for nearly a hundred years, until about 1795, when it was repurchased by the Choates and occupied by them until 1805. It was then purchased by Mr. Jonathan Story, and remained in his and his heirs' possession until about 1879, when it was bought by Lamont G. Burnham, Esq., of Boston, and occupied as a summer residence. This has been known for some years as the "Burnham Farm."

The so-called "Marshall Farm," lying between the two others and adjacent to the original Choate homestead, was purchased of the Choates in 1805 by William Cogswell, whose wife was Lucy Choate, and occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Cogswell until 1814, when it was sold to Mr. Moses Marshall, whose wife was Hannah Choate, and it has continued in the Marshall family to the present time, Mr. Nehemiah Choate Marshall, of Manchester, Mass., being its present proprietor, so that the place has always been owned by the Choates or those who married into the family.

The first and original of the three farms which the island comprises is that on which Thomas Choate and his young wife settled in 1690, and where Hon. Rufus Choate was born, in 1799. This farm is now owned and occupied by Rufus Choate, Esq., and has remained in the name from the beginning, a period of two hundred years and more.

It is a singular fact that no Choates except the lineal descendants of the so-called "Gov. Thomas Choate" have ever lived on the Island. The other sons of Sergt. John Choate, the immigrant, settled on the mainland of Chebaeco, and the youngest of them in Kingston, N. H. Their descendants, like those of "Governor Thomas," have scattered into all parts of the United States and Canada.

There have been eighty persons of the Choate name born on the Island, which henceforth will be known as "Choate Island." These births cover a period of more than a hundred years, from 1691 to 1805. The names and dates of births are as follows:—

REMARKS.

Gov. Thomas Choate settled on the island in 1690. and removed to the main land about 1725.

Esquire Francis Choate, born on the island in 1701. removed to the main land in 1738.

Capt. William Choate, born on the island in 1730. died there in 1785. but was taken to the main land for burial.

Mr. Isaac Choate, born on the island in 1734. removed to Leicester, Mass., in 1770.

Mr. George Choate, born on the island in 1762. removed to the main land in 1790.

David Choate, Esq., born on the island in 1757. removed to the main land in 1800.

Lieut. Thomas Choate, born on the island in 1693. removed to the main land about 1750.

Capt. Thomas Choate, born on the island in 1718. removed to Boscawen, N. H., about 1788.

Ensign Humphrey Choate, born on the island in 1720. died there in 1795. but taken to the main land for burial.

Mr. Jacob Choate, born on the island in 1735. removed to Enfield about 1785, and to Canada in 1798.

Mr. Solomon Choate, born on the island in 1760. removed from the Marshall to the Burnham Farm in 1795. and early in 1805 to Enfield, N. H.

Forty of the eighty Choates born on the Island were born on the old Choate Farm, thirty-six on the Marshall, and four were born on the Burnham Farm. Among them were two wives of ministers, seven deacons, two military captains, three sea captains, seven magistrates, two members of Governor's Council, six representatives to the General Court of Massachusetts, two State senators, one United States senator, one Judge of Court of Common Pleas and Probate Court, and many others filling subordinate offices in the town, state, and army. There were many Choates in the army of the Revolution.

The aggregate years of service of the Choates born on this island in the Massachusetts Legislature amount to nearly seventy.

There were thirty-seven daughters born on the Island. Several died in infancy, and one in early maidenhood; the rest were all married, and some of them twice or three times. These young ladies were intelligent and attractive, and as wives and mothers brought scarcely less credit to the name of Choate than did the young men, their brothers, who won honors in the state and nation.

The last born of the name in the old Choate homestead on the Island was the Hon. RUFUS CHOATE, late of Boston.

The picture of Choate Island accompanying this sketch was taken by the artist standing on "Corn Island," at the south or southeast, a third of a mile away. The buildings seen at the extreme right mark the "Burnham Farm," of which the present proprietor is Lamont G. Burnham, Esq. Those midway of the picture belong to the "Marshall Farm," and were erected in 1764 by Capt. Thomas Choate. The place is now owned by Nehemiah Choate Marshall. The buildings at the left, nearly hidden by the trees, are on the original "Choate Farm," and erected about 1725 by Elder Francis Choate. The old house of "The Governor" stood a few rods in the rear of the present house; the site is still distinctly marked. There appear, a little to the left of the "Choate house," "Tower Cottage" and "Omaha Cottage," summer residences erected within a few years to accommodate visitors, by the present proprietor of this farm, Rufus Choate, Esq.

It may here be stated that although so many Choates have been born within this island precinct, and so many have been married here, yet no person of the name has ever been buried on the Island.

SARAH CHOATE.

Sarah<sup>e</sup> Choate (John<sup>1</sup>), daughter of John [1] and Anne Choate, was born in Chebacco, Ipswich, Mass. She married, April 13, 1693, John Burnham, son of John and Elizabeth (Wells) Burnham. He was born April 8, 1671, in Chebacco, Ipswich, Mass., where they resided. Mr. Burnham died 1746. Mrs. Burnham died.

Memoranda.

MR. BURNHAM was the grandson of Thomas Burnham, who, with his two brothers, John and Robert, came to America when young men, in 1635, on board the ship "Angel Gabriel," which was under the command of their uncle, Robert Andrews. Thomas and John settled in Chebacco, Ipswich, Mass. Robert settled in Dover, N. H. There are few, if any, of the descendants of John and Sarah (Choate) Burnham now living in Essex, Mass. Their second son, Thomas Burnham, removed to York County, Me.

Vid. Burnham Genealogy, pp. 311, 312, 314, 492.

The Burnhams came to America on the same unfortunate ship which brought to these shores John Cogswell and family, and was wrecked off the coast of Maine near Pemiquid, or Bristol. For an interesting account of the passage,

Vid. Cogswells in America, pp. xvi-xxi.

"John Secundus, married Elizabeth Wells June 9 1669 . . . had John, born April 8th 1671."

Vid. Hammatt Papers, p. 41.

The above John Burnham, the second, was not John Burnham, Jr., but the second John born in 1648, and the son of Thomas and Mary Burnham.

John Burnham, the son of Deacon John Burnham, was not born, probably, prior to 1660.

It was John Burnham, the son of John the Second, whom Sarah Choate, daughter of John Choate, immigrant, married. i. e. the grandson of Thomas Burnham and not the son of Deacon John Burnham, the immigrant. There has occurred some confusion, as the latter's wife's name was Sarah.

Memoranda.

BENJAMIN CHOATE, the youngest son of John Choate, the immigrant, fitted for college under the instruction of Mr. Daniel Rogers, at the Ipswich Grammar School, and graduated from Harvard College in 1703. He was appointed, by the Colony of Massachusetts, Chaplain of the garrison stationed in Deerfield, Mass., from November, 1704, to November, 1706, two years, while Rev. John Williams was a captive to the Indians. He was paid from the public treasury. Mr. Choate was ordained as an Evangelist, and was employed to preach in 1707 by the town of Kingston, N. H.

"Oct 1707." there is a record of an agreement "to pay a salary to Rev. Mr. Benjamin Choate of £50 a year: £30 current silver money and £20 in labor and provisions pay: also a grant of land." There appears from time to time the record of a vote. "That the town give Rev. B. Choate forty cords of wood this year."

April 16, 1716, a committee was chosen to confer with Mr. Benjamin Choate "upon terms of continuance amongst us in the work of the ministry," also a vote to add £10 to the salary, making the whole £60; at the end of two years £5 more, yearly, "if he continues with us in the work of the ministry." Also a vote that £40 shall be presented to him when he builds a house in the town. Five voters entered a dissent to this vote.

Just how long Mr. Choate continued in the work of the ministry is not known, but a call was extended Feb. 16, 1720, to Mr. William Tomson, who accepted the same, yet further than this no record or tradition exists in proof that such a man as Mr. Tomson ever preached in the town.

There seems to have been no church organization during Mr. Choate's ministry, but Sept. 29, 1725, a church was organized, and on the same day Rev. Ward Clark became its pastor, but died May 6, 1737.

Mr. Choate continued to reside in Kingston after he retired from his ministry. He was employed somewhat as a teacher, served as moderator of their town meetings, and was a surveyor of lands. It was whispered sometimes "That he used too much strong drink." This habit was doubtless induced by the custom of those times to serve wines and various liquors to the minister when on his round of pastoral calls.

Rev. Mr. Choate died at the age of seventy-three years. Mrs. Choate survived him and all her children, living to be eighty-five years old.

The deaths of their children are recorded in the town records of Kingston, N. H. For mention of Rev. Mr. Choate.

She married, Nov. 29, 1706, George Martin, son of George Martin. He was born in Chebacco, Ipswich, Mass. Mr. Martin died. Mrs. Martin died prior to 1735.

The marriage of above parties was consummated Nov. 29, 1706, by Rev. John Wise, of Chebacco.

Elizabeth, daughter of George Martin, Jr., by Anne his wife, was born "Jan<sup>y</sup> 17, 1707/8" as appears by a record attested by "W<sup>m</sup>. Giddings, Chebacco Ipswich."

"Dec. 9th 1734 David Preston and wife Elizabeth of Windham Connecticut received of Robert Choate £20, legacy from John Choate [2] father of Robert to his grand daughter Elizabeth Preston, only child of his daughter Anne Martin deceased."

Vid. The Hammatt Papers, p. 53.

David Preston, son of Jacob and Sarah (Wilson) Preston, was born in Andover, Mass. He went, between 1718 and 1724, to Windham, Conn. There seem to have been no descendants.

REV. JOHN CLEAVELAND.

MR. CLEAVELAND had a natural fondness for books and a taste for study. At the age of nineteen years, in 1741, he entered Yale College, but was expelled his senior year, 1745, for attending, during his vacation, a religious service conducted by a "New-light preacher," i. e., a follower of Whitfield, who officiated where his parents worshipped: a painful reflection on the bigotry of those times. But the college, some twenty years later, in 1764, unsolicited, conferred upon Mr. Cleaveland his degree and entered his name among the graduates of his own class of 1745, thus doing him a tardy justice. He preached for two years in Boston, Mass., but declined a call to settle. Soon after, however, he accepted a call to the "newly-gathered Congregational Church," in Chebacco, and was ordained and installed as their pastor at the age of twenty-five years. He continued in this pastorate for fifty-two years, being absent occasionally on special duty in the army.

He was Chaplain of a Provincial Regiment at Ticonderoga, and was on the battlefield when Lord Howe was killed. He served in a like capacity in an expedition against the French at Louisburg. He was also Chaplain of a regiment in 1775 at Cambridge, and the next year on a short campaign in New York.

Rev. Mr. Cleaveland was a man about six feet tall and very erect: he had a florid complexion and blue eyes. He was a person of great muscular strength and activity with a large share of moral courage. He rarely wrote his sermons, except those which were published, but they were carefully prepared and uttered with distinctness and rapidity. His voice was stentorian, his gestures natural and expressive, and he was considered one of the most popular and powerful preachers of his time. Dr. N. Emmons, of Franklin, said of him, "He was a pattern of piety and an ornament to the Christian and Clerical profession. He stood high among the first of faithful preachers of the Gospel and zealous promoters of the cause of Christ and the good of souls." He died on his birthday at the age of seventy-seven years after a short and painful illness. The Rev. Joseph Dana, second pastor of the South Church in Ipswich, preached his funeral sermon, taking for the text, "And Elisha saw it, and he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof!"—2 KINGS ii. 12.

Mr. Cleaveland fitted for college in Dummer Academy, Byfield, Mass., then in charge of the Rev. Isaac Smith. He entered Bowdoin College, September, 1809, from which he graduated with honors, at the age of seventeen years, in 1813. Having spent the next year in the Andover Theological Seminary, he then entered upon his life work as a teacher. He taught in Dedham, Mass., Gorham, Me., and in Portland, Me. In 1817 he was called to a tutor's chair in Bowdoin College, where for three years he taught the Classics.

He then became the Principal of Dummer Academy, where he had fitted for college when a lad. He was at the head of this institution for nineteen years, and fulfilled a very successful and honorable service. Retiring from this position he became the Professor of Languages in Phillips Academy, Exeter, N. H. Subsequently he became the Head Master of the High school in Lowell, Mass., and later he completed his long and useful service as a teacher by filling, for a time, the position of Principal of a seminary for young ladies in Brooklyn, N. Y.

A. Cleveland

Dr. Cleaveland was a fine classical scholar, a careful and wise educator, and a teacher who won the esteem of, and was held in the warmest regard by, his pupils. He visited Europe in 1851, and again in 1858. In his later life he retired to the old homestead in Topsfield, Mass., where, amid the scenes of his childhood, he gave himself up to his favorite studies, and extended to his friends and pupils a most generous hospitality.

Dr. Cleaveland was a graceful public speaker, with something of the poetic in his nature. He was often called to give college orations and commemorative discourses, which were rendered in the highest degree interesting and attractive by his graceful style, wealth of culture and literary resources, and the delicate play of his fancy.

Dr. Cleaveland was very attractive in person and gentlemanly in his manners. His form compact, of medium height, his movements elastic and graceful, neat in his dress, accustomed to society, with rare conversational gifts, given to humor, and with an inexhaustible fund of fresh anecdotes for ready use, he was remarkably fascinating socially and from him one parted with regret. He united in 1856 with the Congregational Church in Byfield, Mass., from which he never removed his membership. The last few years of his life were spent with his son and daughter in Westport, Conn., where he died April 17, 1877, having attained the age of fourscore years. Dr. Cleaveland, it is said, was especially proud of his connection with the Choate family.

Miss Abby E. Cleaveland, daughter of the lamented Nehemiah Cleaveland, LL.D., residing in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has in her possession some ancestral valuables. The record he made for himself, in the halls of legislation, in military campaigns, in finance and in all kinds of public business, plainly shows that he was a man of commanding talent, rare sagacity, and great executive ability.

The author of this volume wishes here to acknowledge his great indebtedness to Isaac Bassett Choate, Ph. D., of Boston, Mass., for valuable papers on three of the most eminent, now deceased, of the Choate name. These are appropriately designated as JOHN CHOATE, THE COMMONER; STEPHEN CHOATE, THE COUNCILLOR; and REFUS CHOATE, THE ADVOCATE. These papers are inserted in their natural places, and first in order is. —

JOHN CHOATE, THE COMMONER.

THE public life of Col. John Choate covers some thirty years almost directly preceding the Revolution. He was actively engaged, with equal zeal and judgment, in the military, the financial, the civil, the educational, and the ecclesiastical affairs of the Province in his day. Colonel Choate was elected to the General Court, as member for Ipswich, for the first time in 1731, and he was re-elected in 1732, '33, '35, '41, '42, '43, '45, '46, '47, '48, '49, '54, '57, and '60, serving in the House of Representatives for fifteen years, and for five years he was a member of the Council. His part in public affairs is shown from the records of the General Court.

June 10, 1735, John Choate was one of a committee appointed by the House to lay out a township, granted to Lieut. Abraham Tilton and fifty-nine others, all but eight from Ipswich, and known as Ipswich Canada, afterwards as Winchendon, Mass.

Vid. History of Ashburnham, p. 45, and History of Ipswich, Mass., p. 71.

"1735, APR. 27th.—Rev. Mr. Fisk (who was the father of Gen. John Fisk of Revolutionary fame) headed a mob to get the pulpit from Mr. Mather who had been hired to preach. On May 2, Col. Wainwright, Col. Berry, Mr. Hale, Mr. Choate, Esquires Dutch and Abbott came here by order of the Court to enquire into this disturbance on the Sabbath; a complaint being entered against Mr. Fisk, he was bound over to his good behavior." Copied from an interleaved almanac for 1735, by James Jeffrey, Esq., of Salem, Mass. Vid. Essex Inst. Hist. Col., Vol. 2, p. 65.

After a few years' absence from the General Court, Mr. Choate was again in his seat in 1741. The first session of that year was short and unimportant. At the opening of the second session, July 8, Mr. Choate was chosen Speaker of the House. Upon the Speaker-elect being presented to the Governor for that functionary to approve or disapprove the choice made by the House, his Excellency peremptorily disapproved. The reason for the disapproval is plainly seen in the light of the political history of that time. Jonathan Belcher was governor, and these were the last days of his administration. His unpopularity was not wholly personal, as may be gathered from the history of the period.

Under date of Sept. 30, 1852, Ellis Ames, of Canton, writes to Hon. Rufus Choate, of Boston, somewhat relating to the public life of Col. John Choate, and of this incident he writes as follows:—

"The elections of May, 1741, in the House, were displeasing to Gov. Belcher: so much so, that on the second or third day of the session Gov. Belcher sent in a message as follows:

"Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, the management of the elections made yesterday discover to me so much of the inclination of your House to support the fraudulent pernicious scheme commonly called the "Land Bank," condemned at Home by his Majesty and both Houses of Parliament of Great Britain; that I judge it derogatory to the King's honor and service, and inconsistent with the peace and welfare of the people that you sit any longer in General Assembly, and I have therefore directed Mr. Secretary Willard to declare the Court dissolved.

May 28th, 1741.

J. BELCHER.

"Court was dissolved accordingly. Forthwith precepts were issued and a new election was held. The new House was made up of the same members except in fourteen instances out of one hundred and eleven. It met on July 8, 1741, and we have seen what action was taken. The House subsequently elected John Hobson, of Rowley, Speaker, and this action was approved."

In regard to Governor Belcher's charge that the Land-bank scheme was fraudulent, it may be said that the records of Middlesex County show that John Choate and his associates held one hundred and thirty-one parcels of real estate in that county alone as a part of the basis of security for the redemption of the notes. Among these associates were Samuel Adams and others who were forced to oppose royalty.

Three days after the disapproval of Governor Belcher, July 11, Mr. Choate was made one of a committee to communicate to William Shirley the congratulations of the court upon his appointment as Governor of the Province.

July 24, he was made one of the committee to meet the commissioners of Rhode Island and settle the disputed boundary between the two Provinces. It may have been the work of this commission that was ridiculed with characteristic raillery by Rufus Choate, Esq., about a century later.

1743. June 1. John Choate was appointed one of a committee "to inquire who were formerly sufferers, as Quakers, or on account of Witchcraft; and what satisfaction has been made by this Court to such sufferers; and report what may be proper to do thereon."

1744. Mr. Choate is found serving on committees on bills of credit, to ascertain their rate with gold and silver; on bills of credit of other provinces, on the payment of taxes, and other financial matters.

1745 was a busy year. In January, Mr. Choate was on four different committees relative to the expedition against Louisburg. One of these was to go to Connecticut, New York, and the Jerseys to solicit help. He does not appear to have been in attendance at court from Feb. 27, when he was made one of a committee to prepare an address to the King relative to the proposed expedition, until the close of the session, in May. It is reasonable to suppose that he was absent upon the commission to Connecticut and New York.

June 1, John Choate was commissioned by Governor Shirley Colonel of the Eighth Massachusetts Regiment. The court records for that date read, "Capt. Choate informing the House that he proposed to go to Cape Breton with the recruits now to be raised, desiring liberty to be absent, etc.

"Resolved that he have liberty to be absent from the House whilst the recruits are raising and during the expedition against Louisburg, and liberty to take his seat in this House on his return."

June 20, he was commissioned by Peter Warren, Esq., of the fleet, and by William Pepperell, Esq., of the land forces, Judge Advocate of a Court of Admiralty at Louisburg. "July 5th, 1745, Green Hill; This day arrived Col. Choate from Boston with a company of men." Vid. Crafts' Journal of Siege of Louisburg.

He served as Judge Advocate until Dec. 3, when he resigned, and on the thirteenth following he was in his seat in the House. That day he was made one of a committee to draft a letter of congratulation to Lieutenant-General Pepperell, upon occasion of that officer being knighted.

1746 opened with negotiations between the Province and England in regard to the payment of the expenses of the expedition against Louisburg. These matters were not finally adjusted until the end of the Revolutionary War. Colonel Choate served on most of the committees having this business in charge.

1747 opened with talk of another military expedition,— this one against Crown Point. Of the various committees on which Colonel Choate served, was one to which he was appointed Oct. 16. This was a committee "On encouraging manufactures and other industries of the Province." This was one of the earliest general standing committees mentioned in our Provincial history.

1748. June 16, the Governor informed the Court that he proposed to effect an exchange of prisoners with Canada. The following day John Choate was chosen by the two houses commissioner to meet the Six Nations of New York. He was paid fifty pounds towards expense of a journey to Quebec. On the 24th inst. he was ordered by the Court to pay into the treasury thirty pounds, and thereupon to be discharged of the fifty pounds. It will appear later that this commission probably took him to Albany only. In this year there was a great disturbance at Haverhill, Mass., and the General Court interfered, ordering a new town meeting to be called, and appointing John Choate, Esq., to be moderator thereof. Accordingly a meeting was holden on the 22d of November, 1748, when Mr. Choate presided, and the same persons were for the third time chosen town officers. Is there another instance in New England history of a town meeting presided over by a moderator not of its own choosing, and not an inhabitant of the town? Vid. Chase's History of Haverhill, p. 331.

1749. June 6, Colonel Choate was appointed one of a committee "to consider of some proper Encouragement for improving of the Natural Advantages of the Soil & Climate & better improving the Fishery & Employing the Inhabitants of this Province to the best Advantage, and for having a proper Duty upon Commodities imported unnecessary to the Inhabitants of the Province." This was the revival of the commission of Oct. 16, 1747, with enlarged scope of action. Its duties were precisely those of the Home Government, if the Home Government proposed to have any part in the affairs of the Province. We need not suppose that it had any prophetic or monetary significance on either side of the water in order to give this commission prime historical importance. It is to be regarded as an infantile step by a people just learning to go alone. In this year, Colonel Choate was made chairman of a committee "to enquire who were formerly Sufferers, as Quakers, or on account of Witchcraft." This was the same matter that was before the court in 1743. Mr. Choate was the only member of that earlier committee who was appointed to serve on this later one. It was a delicate matter, and the committee was reluctant to act. In the temporary absence of Mr. Choate, Nathaniel Oliver was appointed to service in his place.

On Sept. 14, 1749, Rev. Thomas Smith, of Falmouth, now Portland, Me., wrote in his journal, "The Commissioners came to town, viz., Hutchinson, Choate, Williams, Theodore Atkinson and John Downing and Otis." These were Gov. Thomas Hutchinson, Col. John Choate, Col. Israel Williams, Theodore Atkinson, and John Downing, of New Hampshire, and Col. James Otis, of Barnstable. They were in Falmouth to negotiate a treaty with the Penobscot Indians. The treaty was signed Oct. 16, 1749.

From the closing of the court in May, 1750, to the session beginning May 29, 1754, Colonel Choate's name does not appear in connection with the affairs of the Province. Subsequent records make it highly probable that in this interval he was employed in treating with New York and the Six Nations relative to the Crown Point expeditions.

1754, Oct. 22 and Nov. 1, Colonel Choate was one of committees to whom were referred communications from Lieutenant-Governor Delaney, of New York, on Indian affairs.

1755, Jan. 9, Colonel Choate was made chairman of a committee "on matters in Difference between the two Houses respecting the Letter to Mr. Agent Bollan which relates to the Excise Act passed this Session." The entry made on the following day, taken in connection with many other records, shows the conservative character of Mr. Choate, as well as his full appreciation of the delicacy of the financial relations between the Province and the Home Government. The record reads: "A message was brought up from the House to his Excellency by Col. Choate and others to signify that the matters contained in his speech of this day and his Message referring to the Treasurer are of such moment that the House have desired the consideration thereof till the next Session."

On Feb. 18, 1755, Colonel Choate was made one of a committee to present an address from the House of Representatives to his Excellency relative to an expedition against Crown Point. Oct. 28, Colonel Choate was elected one of three commissioners to repair to Albany on the affairs of the expedition. Nov. 6, these commissioners were empowered by the General Court to raise and equip troops, and provide for their subsistence, etc. This expedition failed.

1756, April 4, it was voted "that John Choate, Esqr., be of the committee lately appointed to reside at or near Albany to take care of the transportation of provisions and stores from Albany and Lake George for the use of the army now raising for the intended expedition against Crown Point."

In this year Colonel Choate was appointed fifth Judge of Probate of Essex County, and continued in that office till his death.

1757, Nov. 26, Colonel Choate was one of a committee appointed to consider the message of Governor Pownall in regard to quartering officers in Boston for recruiting troops to serve in Nova Scotia. The Selectmen of the town had refused the requisition made upon them by the British admiral, the Earl of Loudon. A little later, Jan. 6, 1758, Colonel Choate was member of a committee of the House to present to the Governor a message in relation to the Earl of Loudon's letter. This question of authority between the Selectmen of Boston and the British Admiral was one of the most entertaining and instructive preliminaries to the Revolution.

1758, Jan. 10, Colonel Choate was made one of a committee on the petition of French Acadians of Methuen, and other places in the Province, who complained to the General Court of the insufficiency of provision for their support. On the 24th of January he was appointed one of five commissioners who were to meet and confer with commissioners from the other New England colonies. Connecticut was the only other colony represented in the meeting at Boston. With these an agreement was made which was to continue in force for three years. The agreement consisted of eighteen articles, relating chiefly to measures to be taken against the French. The articles were signed by the commissioners Feb. 8, 1758.

During this year, 1758, Colonel Choate became involved in a matter which lay outside his ordinary public duties, but which claims notice here. It brought him into a position in which he felt called upon to declare and maintain his opinions. In the growing divergence of religious views, he appeared as the sturdy champion of orthodoxy. As he there put himself on record in print, the controversy enables us to see the truly Puritan nature and character of the man himself.

Sept. 19, 1758, there was held at West Haverhill a council of nine churches to examine charges made against the Rev. Samuel Bacheller. The charges were formulated in twenty articles, all of which, except one, related to matters of doctrine. Chief among them was this, that Rev. Mr. Bacheller declared "that the work of Redemption was finished when Christ cried, 'It is finished!'" Mr. Choate was a lay member of the council. The action of the council, exculpating and sustaining the accused, was signed by sixteen members. Mr. Choate, April 17, 1759, entered his dissent to certain votes on the record. The following year, 1760, his "Reasons of Dissent from the Judgment of the Council respecting the Doctrine of Rev. Mr. Bacheller" were printed by D. Towle, at Portsmouth, in a pamphlet of seventeen pages.

Vid. Mass. Hist. Soc. Lib'y.

This pamphlet closes with the following paragraph: "Very like this performance, as to manner and method, may appear very defective in the eyes of the learned; but I depend on the weight and force of the matter; and expect, at present, that in that regard it will bear the test of TRUTH, and fair reasoning; if not, let it go. I shall be thankful to him, that from these sources shows it." Becomingly modest is this first appearance of the Choates in the literature of the New World.

The discussion already opened was continued by the Rev. Willard Hall, whose "Answer to Col. Choate's 'Reasons of Dissent'" was printed, probably, in 1760. This "Answer" was followed by a pamphlet of twenty-seven pages, printed at Boston, N. E., 1761, and entitled "Remarks on the late printed 'Answer to Col. Choate's 'Reasons of Dissent.'" This is a spirited defence, if it does not rather deserve to be called an attack. The writer does not spare the respondent out of regard for his clerical office. In his prefatory remarks Colonel Choate says, "To hold him up to the view of the world, in the ridiculous light his performance has placed him, is all that in justice he had to expect. I shall gratify him by remarking on some of his defects; and I shall leave the rest unnoticed." So much space has been given to an account of these pamphlets because they constitute the only contributions to our literature, bearing the name of Choate, during the first two centuries of our history.

1761, May 27, Colonel Choate was chosen a member of the Council, and he continued to hold this place in the upper house of the General Court throughout the rest of his public life.

With his other public duties, Colonel Choate had served as treasurer of Essex County, for we find this entry in the records of the General Court: "June 11th, 1761. The account of John Choate Esqr., Treasurer of the County of Essex, to March, 1761, was allowed."

1762, Feb. 22, Colonel Choate was one of a committee appointed to prepare an address to his Majesty, most humbly representing the great importance of retaining the Conquests in Canada, and of annexing them to his Majesty's other American Dominions.

From this time on, John Choate was employed upon the higher interests of the Province until June 17, 1764, when his account as treasurer was again allowed as being "right cast and well vouch't." He was now absent from the Council until the 27th of October. It must have been within this time that he superintended the building of the stone bridge at Ipswich, he being chairman of the bridge committee. By order of the Court of Sessions this bridge was inscribed, "Choate Bridge, built 1764."

The low stone arches of this bridge stand to the present day, and they bid fair to stand for centuries to come, as an enduring monument to the trustworthiness of this Pontifex Maximus of the gens Choat'ia.

It was upon the suggestion of Colonel Choate that the Town and County, at a joint reference, decided to build this bridge. Many of his fellow-townsmen were opposed to the plan. They prophesied failure and loss to the public. Great obloquy was incurred by him for "this spending of the people's money on a foolish project." The indignation of the mal-contents was expressed in these doggerel lines:—

"Colonel Choate, in his great folly, Built Ipswich bridge and turned out Whalley."

But we have this rejoinder in a bit of verse of the same date, which is just as good doggerel as the other:—

"Behold this bridge of lime and stone!
The like before was never known
For beauty and magnificence,
Considering the small expense.

"How it excels what was expected,
Upon the day it was projected!
When faithful men are put in trust,
They'll not let all the money rust.

"But some advance for public good
Is by this fabric understood;
And after this it will be wrote
In honor of brave Colonel Choate.

"It was his wisdom built the same,
And added lustre to his fame,
That filled this country with renown,
And did with honor Ipswich crown."

The above lines composed by Mr. Clark, a blind man of Rowley, in 1764, were recited by him on the bridge, in the presence of Colonel Choate and several other persons, before the ground walls were done, although the bridge was so far finished as to be passable. Among the spectators was Nathaniel Dutch, then a lad, who heard the verses recited, and repeated them from memory. December, 1831, previous to which time it is not known that they were ever penned.

THE CHOATE BRIDGE, 1764 (Upper side)

The bridge itself is, however, the best possible testimony to the capacity and honesty of the builder. The opponents of the plan expected to see the bridge fall when the supporting timbers were removed from under the arches, and it is said that the crowd remained watching till night-fall to see the bridge collapse.

This bridge deserves a particular notice, because it was the first of such construction in the country, and hence was so wonderful while being built, and because it has been so substantial and serviceable ever since. The Town and County built it in equal shares of the expense. The contract called for a width of not less than twenty feet, a length between the abutments of sixty-eight feet, one pier twenty by eight feet, a water passage beneath each arch of thirty feet, and guards three feet high, fifteen inches thick at bottom and nine at the top. The building committee were Hon. John Choate, Aaron Potter, Esq., and Joseph Appleton, Esq. It was completed in 1764, at a cost of £996, 10s. 6d. 3f., and named as above as a compliment to the chairman of the building committee.

This bridge was widened in 1836-37. In 1836, May 16, the town chose a committee and conferred upon it "full power to contract and agree with the County Commissioner," in the matter of widening it, providing the cost to the town did not exceed $1,200. This was accomplished, as seen on the opposite page.

1765, May 30, Colonel Choate was elected to the Council. He kept in attendance, with the exception of a few days, until Saturday, June 15, when his name appears upon the records of the General Court for the last time. The life work of the tried old public servant was now done, and he left the Council Chamber approved as having his accounts "right cast and well vouch't." His death occurred Dec. 17, 1765.

This brief outline of his career shows what manner of man John Choate was in public life. A few incidents may be added to help us see him as he lived among neighbors and friends. Oct. 4, 1747, he entertained the Ecclesiastical Council of sixty gentlemen, assembled for the settlement of the Rev. John Whalley, first pastor of the South Congregational Church of Ipswich. Colonel Choate is described as wearing on this occasion a scarlet cloak, and a sword with a silver hilt. This Whalley is the one who has already been referred to above as having been turned out by the Colonel. The manner of effecting this is characteristic of the man. After some years the parish became desirous of a change in the pastorate. On occasion Rev. Mr. Whalley complained that he had not a sufficient salary, and he asked Colonel Choate how he had better proceed to have it increased, saying, "Colonel, would you in my place ask for a dismissal as a threat?" "Yes," said the Colonel, "that will do it." Thereupon the parson asked for a dismissal which, to his great surprise and chagrin, the Church and Parish immediately granted.

The Colonel bore the reputation in his day and among his associates of having "honored Christ by his profession and practice of Religion."

*Vid. Felt's History of Ipswich, Mass., p. 180,
The History of Essex, pp. 187, 188, and History of Essex County, Vol. 1, pp. 630, 631.*

THE CHOATE BRIDGE, 1837. (Lower Side.)

But notwithstanding this eminently respectable position in the community, there have been expressed serious doubts whether Colonel Choate was "as pious as the times required." And this suspicion was based upon the following circumstance: When the Colonel was living on the farm which he afterward bequeathed to his nephew, Stephen Choate, Esq., he had a neighbor named Tilton, of Tilton Hill Farm, who would occasionally pass an evening with the Colonel, playing a game of cards. One very dark night Tilton started for home, and reaching a pair of bars which stood on a dyke, in the boundary fence between him and the Colonel, he saw with dismay a head with horns, and with eyes glaring at him through the rails. He felt guilty about the card playing, and ran at full speed to the Colonel's door. "What's the matter?" asked the Colonel. "Colonel Choate!" said Tilton, "we must stop this! The Devil has come!" "Where did you see him?" "At the dyke bars." "Stop a moment, Tilton; I will go with you and see him." When they reached the fence he was still there, but the Colonel soon discovered that the Devil was no other than one of Tilton's oxen looking through the bars.

The colonel's education was imperfect; his advantages had been limited. Especially was he weak in his spelling, but it must be borne in mind that our ancestors of that day enjoyed larger liberties in this matter than have been enjoyed since our national independence was secured. It can be said that he bore the taunts of illiteracy with perfect good nature, for there is told the story that "while Choate was a member of the House, he sent to the speaker's desk, on one occasion, a report, or other writing, in his own hand, so badly written, and containing so many blunders in spelling, that the speaker declared his inability to decipher it, and added that it did not contain a single word properly spelled: whereupon Choate rose, and after repeating the words of the speaker, said, 'Now the paper before you contains the word the—t-h-e—which I think is spelled quite right. If you cannot read it, pass it to me, and I will read it myself.'" Vid. Essex Inst. Coll., Vol. 3., p. 11.

The present writer will add that a letter written by Colonel Choate, from Louisburg, in 1745, and now on file in the Archives of Massachusetts, does not show any marked literary deficiency on the part of its author.

In his controversy with the Rev. Willard Hall, which has already been mentioned, it is plainly with reference to some slur upon him for his illiteracy that he quotes the lines:—

"To Athens gown'd he goes, and from that school Returns, unsped, a more instructed fool."

His appreciation of learning and his interest in education are to be seen in his service on committees dealing with the affairs of Harvard College. The inventory of his estate proves that he was possessed of such books as John Flavel's Works, Leland's "View of Deistical Writers," and Edwards on the "Freedom of the Human Will." The reading of these books calls for a good degree of intellectual training and it yields still more.

By his will, Colonel Choate emancipated his two slaves, Binah and Jane, making provision for their support.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE, while a young man, learned the trade of a blacksmith, of his brother-in-law, Isaac Martin. This acquired art he put to a practical use. It is said that he made all the iron-work for three schooners which he built in company with his brother, Thomas Choate, and also that with the assistance of his slave, Caesar, he sawed out by hand all the plank used in the construction of these vessels. While not himself a seafaring man he was much interested in maritime affairs and owned and chartered many vessels engaged in fishing and in the coasting trade. Not long after his marriage an event occurred which seems to have made a profound impression on the minds of this young man and his wife, just fairly settled in their new home on the Island. Oct. 29, 1727, "On the Sabbath Day at night, about ten of y<sup>e</sup> clock there was a great earthquake throughout the Province which shook the houses and threw down the tops of chimneys in many places." And Mr. Felt, the local historian, remarks: "It so affected the minds of people, that it was a means used by the Holy Spirit to produce a very powerful revival of religion in the Ipswich parishes. The same desirable result was experienced throughout New England."

What this startling event had to do with their conversion does not clearly appear, but Mr. Choate and his wife Hannah joined the church very soon after the great earthquake.

"Esquire Francis," as Mr. Choate was called, became prominent in church as well as in the town. For many years he held the office of a Ruling Elder. It is said of him that he was a tower of strength in the "Whitefield movement," and to the close of his life the right-hand man of his pastor, the Rev. John Cleaveland.

Like many of his day he was a slave-holder. His slave "Ned" became interested in religion before his master, who reprimanded him for leaving the Island so often to attend religious meetings, but later Esquire Francis confessed that he did not wonder now that Ned loved to go to the meetings.

This Ned married a negress Sabina, called 'Binah, and she had a large family of children. Three of them, James, Violet and Titus, were baptized Oct. 24, 1742. Two of the daughters, when nearly grown up, took cold by exposure in the barn at a husking and died. They were buried on the Island. The spot is marked by a pine-tree.

Mr. Choate was kind to his slaves, and in his will provided for their freedom, or for their comfortable support, should they become aged, and unable to work. Ned chose to remain in the Choate family on the Island. When quite old the birth of David Choate's oldest child, Mary, occurred, in 1792, and "Old Ned" was greatly vexed because she was not a boy; and later, in 1794, when the second child, Hannah, was born, he was again disappointed, and expressed his feelings by saying, "David's wife is no fool; she'll look out for herself first." Old Ned lived to the age of ninety years, and died Sept. 27, 1800.

Esquire Choate, about 1739, purchased a farm on the main land, known as the "John Burnham place," to which he soon after removed, although he still retained and carried on the "Island Farm," upon which later, about 1755, his sons William and Isaac settled, to whom their father gave a full title in 1769. The next year, 1770, Isaac sold out his half for £666, to his brother William, and with his family removed to Leicester, Mass.

Among the few books of that day in Esquire Choate's bookcase was Flavel's work "On Keeping The Heart," which, with various Law and Custom House papers, is still preserved. Some years before his death he lost his right hand by a cancer. On his dying bed he called his children about him and gave them all his paternal counsel and blessing. To his son John he said: "Don't let the world run away with you, John." And later it is said, "That as Elder Francis Choate lay dying, his minister, the Rev. John Cleaveland, jumped upon his horse and flew to his bedside saying, 'Burgoyne has surrendered!' The dying man waved his hand, with patriotic joy lighting up his face, but was too far gone to speak."

John Choate, Esq., his son, in recording the death of his parents in his journal, writes of them this tribute:—

"They were eminent for their piety and religion and left their dying testimony to the truth of it. May their posterity imitate their virtues."

Vid. History of Essex, Mass., p. 219.

Mrs. Choate was a descendant of John Perkins, who came from Newent, Gloucestershire, England, to this country, in 1631, on board the ship "Lyon," and who had for a fellow passenger the afterward famous Roger Williams, of Rhode Island. She was the daughter of a sea captain, and a woman of sterling qualities. She survived her husband less than a year, and died Oct. 2, 1778.

Vid. The Perkins Family, pp. 44, 45, 64.

It has been said "That among all the Choate ancestry none were so illustrious for their piety as were Esquire Francis and his good wife Hannah."

THE BIRTHPLACE OF HON. RUFUS CHOATE.

Near the river, at the foot of the easterly slope of "Choate Island," there stands to-day a well constructed farm-house, finely situated, modern in appearance, with an agreeable outlook and an extended prospect of land and sea, which was erected about 1725 by Francis Choate, then a young man soon to be married and making ready a suitable home for his bride from the city of Boston. After these one hundred and seventy years, this dwelling is not only well preserved externally, but the white oak posts and braces, and the heavy timbers throughout, are still undecayed and strong, capable of withstanding the winds and storms of yet other centuries.

Vid. The Rust Genealogy, pp. 1, 35, 54, 55.

The Precinct Records of Chebacco contains the following: "Joseph Rust and Rachel Choate both of Chebacco entered and posted up Aug. 24, 1723.

RUST ARMS.

The marriage ceremony was doubtless by the Rev. John Wise. The marriage of Isaac Martin and Mrs. Rachel Rust, March 2, 1737, is recorded in the handwriting of Rev. Theophilus Pickering. The list of children is copied from the baptismal record in the church book of Chebacco by Rev. Mr. Pickering and his successor, Rev. Nehemiah Porter, with the addition of Robert of the first marriage. It varies somewhat from the record of children given in "The Rust Genealogy."

Joseph Rust, the oldest son, who married Mary Eveleth, was the father of Dr. Parker Russ. How the name became changed from Rust to Russ is unknown. Dr. John Denison Russ, son of Dr. Parker Russ, was the eminent philanthropist, distinguished for his services rendered to the Greeks in their struggle against the Turks, and who left many thousands of dollars for a public library to the town of Essex, Mass.

*Vid. Rust Genealogy, p. 142, and
The History of Essex, Mass., pp. 298-300.*

Mr. Martin was descended from Abraham Martin, who, with his wife and others, were prosecuted for erecting a meeting-house in 1679 in Chebacco.

Hon. John Prince, a prominent citizen of Essex, and for many years a resident of Washington, D. C., was of this lineage.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE was an inn-holder. Under date of Dec. 31, 1751, he petitioned to the General Court in regard to his bond as inn-holder. He sold wine in 1740 to the church committee for an ordination in Boscawen, N. H.

Vid. The History of Boscawen, N. H., p. 31.

He was also Notary Public and Coroner.

Vid. Boston News Letter, June 17, 1744.

There is the following record: "20 Dec 1742 Gov. Thomas Choate gave his house in Newbury, in which his son Ebenezer lives to Ebenezer's Children, but to be used by Ebenezer and wife during their lives. The children then were Benjamin, Thomas Joseph, Mary, Elizabeth and Sarah." Tamozin and John had died, and at that date Joseph was the youngest child. Ebenezer had died in infancy: John and Ebenezer were born later. Elizabeth, their daughter, it is quite probable, married, May 14, 1765, William Babson, son of John and Hannah (Hodgkins) Babson, who was born Oct. 12, 1721, in Gloucester, Mass., and who married July 24, 1744, Mary Williams.

Memoranda.

MR. CHEEVER graduated in 1707 from Harvard College. In 1711 he was called, on a salary of £50 yearly, to settle as the first pastor of the church in Dracut, Mass. This call he declined, and subsequently became the first minister of Manchester, Mass. Sarah Choate was his third wife. She died in early womanhood, and Rev. Mr. Cheever married, in his later life, Sarah Davis, a daughter of Deacon James Davis, of Gloucester, Mass. She was a young lady whom his son, Josiah Cheever, of a previous marriage, had fallen in love with, and her marriage to his father was very disastrous to the young man. She survived her husband more than fifty years, and died Oct. 27, 1808, aged eighty years.

Vid. History of Gloucester, Mass., pp. 77, 329.

Rev. Samuel and Ruth (Angier) Cheever, his parents, were married June 28, 1671. Rev. Samuel Cheever was the son of Ezekiel and Ellen Cheever. Ezekiel Cheever, the famous Boston Latin School master, was the grandfather of Rev. Ames Cheever. He was born Jan. 25, 1615, in London, England, and died Aug. 25, 1708, in Boston, Mass. It is said Ezekiel Cheever was a teacher for seventy years. He was the principal of the Ipswich Grammar School from 1650 to 1660, ten years; he then removed to Charlestown, Mass., and afterward, 1671, to Boston, where he taught to the end of his life, in 1708. He published a Latin grammar, which passed through twenty editions. Mrs. Ellen Cheever, wife of Ezekiel Cheever, died Sept. 10, 1706, in Boston, Mass. They had a daughter Elizabeth Cheever, who married Samuel Goldthwait, who was the grandfather of Col. Thomas Goldthwait, and father of Capt. John Goldthwait, of Boston, Mass. Samuel Goldthwait, who married Elizabeth Cheever, was a son of Thomas Goldthwait, an early settler of Salem, Mass., first found at Roxbury, Mass., as a member of Rev. John Eliot's church.

Mrs. Elizabeth Cheever Gould, who was born Jan. 7, 1825, in Manchester, died Nov. 17, 1893, in Chelsea, Mass. The mother of the poetess, Miss Elizabeth Porter Gould, was a direct descendant of the famous Boston teacher, Ezekiel Cheever.

Rev. Ames Cheever married, Nov. 6, 1733, Mary Sanders. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Joseph Sewall, D. D. Mr. Cheever's maternal grandfather was the Rev. William Ames, a learned Divine of the Church of England, who became a Puritan and intended to come to America, but went to Holland where he died. Mr. Cheever received his Christian name, Ames, in memory of this grandparent. Deacon Samuel Cheever, who died July 7, 1892, aged seventy-eight years, in Manchester, Mass., was a descendant of Rev. Ames Cheever.

Memoranda.

"JONATHAN CHOATT" and his father, "Benjamin Choatt," appear in a list of eighty-four "Kingston Mens Names Sworn to K g<sup>d</sup> 1727." He buys of his father, Rev. Benjamin Choate, in 1732, house, furniture, etc., and Jan. 1, 1737, they jointly convey to Benjamin Choate, Jr., "estate of inheritance."

Vid. Records in Office of Register of Deeds, Exeter, N. H.

Mr. Choate and his brother, Benjamin Choate, Jr., appear in 1738 among eighty-one petitioners for a grant of land.

"To his Excellency Jonathan Belcher Esquire Commander in Chief in and over his Majesties Province of New Hampshire and to the Honorable his Majesties Council: — The Humble Petition of us Inhabitants of Kingstown: — Most Humbly sheweth,

"That with Earnest desire of Enlarging the dominion of the Supreme of the English Territories: and to Accommodate our Posterity under the most happy Administration on Earth. WE have exposed our Persons and Families Goods and Fortunes to the Ravage and Insults of a barbarous Enemy, and many of our dear Friends and Relatives have lost their Lives in the Enterprize, and Others undergone a long and Sore Captivity and some of them redeemed with vast Labour and difficulty and great Expence which has so impoverished many of us that We have been Obligated to sell much of our Lands to the Inhabitants of Other Towns in which distressing and Calamitous Wars we have been their Barrier, and thro' the Unhappy Disputes arising between this and the adjacent Province much of our Lands has been Seized and Settled by the Inhabitants of the neighboring Province which has caused Some of us Inhabitants great Tryalls and Perplexities in being harrassed with Uncomfortable & Chargeable Lawsuits:

"On These and several other Motives we did humbly Request a Tract of Land near adjoining to Ammiskeeg Falls which has laid upon File near Fourteen Years thro' the unsettled State of this Province in respect to the Line.

"We Have been at the Charge of sending a Number of Men to view the Inland and to give us a plan of a suitable Tract of Land which may be indisputable and thro' the Guidance of Providence they have found such a spot between Winnepesaukee & Pemisewasset Rivers. We Therefore humbly Request the favorable and Compassionate consideration of your Excellency and Honours in the Grant of a Township there of Ten miles square or of such other Dimensions and Quantity as in your Wisdom may seem meet and your Petitioners as in duty bound shall ever Pray &c —."

Vid. Early Town Papers, N. H., Vol. XII., pp. 335-7.

This petition with its humble request, like the preceding one, must have lain upon file quite as long ungranted, for we find Jonathan Choate and Benjamin Choate, Jr., with others of Kingston inhabitants, again making petition to His Excellency Benning Wentworth, Esq., Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Province of New Hampshire, for the grant of a "Township to the Northward of & joining to No. 4, so called, & bounding on the East side of Connecticut River." This was under date of "Kingston, 10th Sept<sup>r</sup> 1750."

Vid. Early Town Papers, N. H., Vol. XII., pp. 337, 338.

Mr. Choate served as a soldier in the campaign against Louisburg. This appears from the following: "Jona Choate sick." Louisburg, Nov. 20, 1745, Captain Prescott's Company, Colonel Moore's Regiment.

Vid. Report of Adjutant-General of N. H., Vol. II., p. 66.

There is no mention that he profited by any grant of land petitioned for, but his son became one of the four first settlers of Tamworth, N. H. Mr. Choate died before he was fifty years of age. Letters of administration were taken out in Rockingham Co., March 3, 1757, for the estate of Jonathan Choate, of Kingston, N. H. The inventory was rated June 14, 1757, £1,340. The administrator of his estate sold at auction, Jan. 15, 1758, land to Elizabeth Bridgman. This deed gives the impression that the grantee was the widow of Jonathan Choate, who had married a second time.

Memoranda.

GEN. MICHAEL FARLEY, by occupation, was a tanner during his eventful and honorable life. But while carrying on this business he was called to fill important positions in the town, the Commonwealth, and in the army. Besides other town offices, he filled the office of Town Treasurer for many years. He was Feoffee of the Grammar School, Representative to the General Court for nine years, from 1766 to 1774 inclusive. He was a member of the Provincial Congress in 1774 and 1775, and again of the General Court five years, from 1775 to 1779 inclusive. He filled the office of High Sheriff, and was a Brigadier-Major-General of the Militia.

General Farley was very active in raising volunteers for the army and in fitting them out with clothes, provisions, and arms. Three of his own sons went into the service and fulfilled honorable careers in the army of the Revolution. When one of them, a lad of sixteen years, was starting for the front, his mother, Mrs. Farley, helped him to put on his equipments and charged him to "Behave like a Man." On one occasion, when a regiment were expecting to meet the enemy, this patriotic woman with her own hands filled each man's powder horn with powder which was stored in the garret of her own house.

When Lafayette arrived in this country to offer his services in the Revolutionary contest, he came to Ipswich and was received and treated by General Farley with every mark of a generous respect and hospitality. It is said that in taking off his hat to salute the noble Frenchman he pulled off his wig also in his enthusiasm of respect. In writing home to France as to the manners of the American people, Lafayette mentions, doubtless having in mind the General's great civility, that some of them were so polite that they not only bowed with their hats off, but with their wigs off, too. And when Lafayette was here in 1824, the Nation's guest, he visited Ipswich and in some remarks to the people he alluded to his former visit, and made reference to General Farley, who then was long since dead, and alluded to this incident of his taking off both his hat and his wig in the expression of his great respect.

General Farley was a patriotic, noble-minded, and eminently hospitable man. He gave to his hosts of friends the freedom of his house, and entertained them with a gracious urbanity and an unstinted hospitality.

The Rev. Levi Frisbie, his pastor, who conducted his funeral service, truly said of General Farley, "He was a useful and valuable member of society, employed for many years in various offices of honor and importance, the duties of which he discharged with fidelity and to general satisfaction. He was generous, public spirited, humane, and impartial; a great loss to the town and country."

Vid. Felt's History of Ipswich, Mass., pp. 183, 184.

A stone erected to mark the burial place of GEN. MICHAEL FARLEY is inscribed as follows:—

 HON'BL MICHAEL FARLEY, ESQ'R. Major General of the Militia and Sheriff of the County of Essex: who died
 June 20th 1789 Aet. 70"

"With a mind open, honest and generous, with a heart alive to humanity and compassion, he served for many years, in various stations, private, publick and honorable, his friends, his neighbors and his country, with such integrity, zeal and diligence, as merited an extensive approbation and rendered his death justly regretted."

"Here mixed with earth his ashes must remain Till death shall die and mortals rise again."

"In memory of MRS. ELIZABETH FARLEY.
Consort to the late Gen'l Farley, who died
July 6th 1795 Act. 69."

Michael Farley, the third son of General Farley, was an officer in the army of the Revolution, and after the close of the war went South, where he died. Robert Farley, another son, had some of the military spirit of his father, and served as an Aid to General Lincoln in the Shay's Rebellion, and afterwards was a Colonel in the army of the United States.

Susanna Farley, a daughter, married Capt. William Burleigh, of Boston, Mass.

Thomas Farley, the youngest son, was a physician, and settled in Marietta, Ohio, where he remained until about 1790, when he visited his old Ipswich home, and did not return to the then Territory. His subsequent career is unknown.

Mrs. Elizabeth (Baker) Farley, General Farley's mother, was a daughter of Thomas and Priscilla Baker, of Topsfield, Mass.

John Farley, a brother of General Farley, married, Sept. 1, 1761, Eunice Cogswell. Vid. The Cogswells in America, p. 43.

The Town of Ipswich, Mass., Nov. 21, 1774, voted unanimously to approve the proposals and resolves of the Continental Congress.

"1775 Jan. 3<sup>d</sup>. Voted that Michael Farley be a delegate to the Provincial Congress to be held at Cambridge on the 1st of February. Jan. 19th Instructions to him.

"1st. To use his influence so that Congress appoint an early Fast, because of degeneracy from the good ways of our fathers, and of increasing wickedness and infidelity in Great Britain.

"2<sup>d</sup>. To inquire if any towns have neglected the resolves of the Provincial Congress, and, if so to publish them; and if any persons have not complied with the Association agreement to have their names advertised.

"3<sup>d</sup>. While enemies among ourselves say, that we are seeking after independence, when we are not, endeavour that the Congress alter the government so as to agree with our last charter.

"4th We approve of the wise recommendations of the late Provincial Congress as to our manufactures.

"We should like some particular method pointed out for promoting them."

Deacon Ebenezer Holbrook died Jan. 6, 1768. Mrs. Mehitable (Warner) Holbrook died Feb. 3, 1789, in the ninety-first year of her age.

Vid. Town Records of Pomfret, Conn.

Mr. Holbrook succeeded his father as Deacon in the Church of Pomfret and continued in that office until his death, July 31, 1778.

Although not found recorded there is little doubt that Mrs. Rebecca (Choate) Holbrook was a daughter of Stephen and Rebecca (Bowman) Choate of Roxbury, Mass. John Holbrook, her son, says: "My mother was from Roxbury, Mass." It is said that Miss Rebecca Choate, of Roxbury, was of an aristocratic family, and was a young lady with all the dignity and grace which that term implies. Her grandmother was a Williams, a near relative of Rev. Mr. Williams, of Roxbury, and of Rev. John Williams, of Deerfield, Mass.

Captain Ingalls, who married Mrs. Rebecca (Choate) Holbrook for his second wife, commanded the Pomfret Militia and was in Cambridge, Mass., at the time of the Battle of Bunker Hill. A detail from his company under Lieutenant Grosvenor was engaged in the fight. It was stated by Hon. John Holbrook, son of Deacon John and Rebecca Holbrook, that his mother's sister married Colonel Davis of Boston, and that while the British troops held the town, his cousins, daughters of Colonel and Mrs. Davis, of Boston, came to Pomfret, Conn., and made their home at his father's house.

Vid. The Driver Family, p. 409.

Charles Osgood, Esq., late of Abington, Conn., married Lucy Holbrook, a granddaughter of Deacon John and Mrs. Rebecca Holbrook. Mr. Osgood was born March 20, 1811, and died Dec. 5, 1888. He passed almost his entire life on the old Osgood homestead, which had been in possession of the family since 1747, in Abington, Conn. He was a man of fine personal figure, bearing, and manners. His ability and integrity brought to him many positions of public trust and honor. He was for twenty years Acting School Visitor, one of the founders, and for several years the Corresponding Secretary, and afterwards the President, of the Windham County Agricultural Society. He was commissioned by Governor Buckingham to go south and receive the votes of the Connecticut regiments in 1864, previous to the presidential election. He represented the town in the State Legislature for five terms, and proved himself an influential member. He was chairman of the committee on the State prison, and prepared and introduced a bill, which passed the Legislature, giving to the prisoner a deduction of five days from his term of sentence for each month of good behavior. Mr. Osgood was a public-spirited man, interested in all that had to do with the material, social, educational, and religious welfare of his native place. He was an active and generous supporter of the church, of which he was a member.

Mrs. Osgood, the daughter of Judge John Holbrook, of the Windham bar, died in 1885. Mr. and Mrs. Osgood left two sons and three daughters. One of the daughters is Miss Ellen E. Osgood, for some years a successful teacher in the higher schools and academies.

A memorial volume was printed of William N. Sherman, who married Miss Mary M. Bliss, a granddaughter of Mrs. Rebecca (Choate) Holbrook, and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chabod Bliss. This volume was for private distribution among friends.

Mrs. Sherman has an ancient platter engraved with what is thought by some to be the "Choate Crest," and the initials of her grandmother, "R. C.," the motto being "Fortune de Guerre."

Mrs. Sherman, in later years, resided with her daughter, Mrs. Mead, in Rutland, Vt.

An "In Memoriam of Charles Osgood, Esq.," appeared in the Putnam Patriot of Dec. 14, 1888, published in Putnam, Conn.

Captain Ingalls had twelve children by a previous marriage.

Memoranda.

STEPHEN CHOATE, COUNCILLOR.

WE read in the "History of Essex County," Vol. 1, p. 616, that Stephen Choate, of Ipswich, was chosen, June 29, 1774, on a Committee of Correspondence. The peculiar services of these committees at that time need not be set forth at length. The bare record given above enables us to identify the good deacon of the second precinct of Ipswich with the cause of American Independence at an early stage in the struggle between the Colonies and England. This membership of the committee did not of itself constitute admission to public life, but it no doubt served in this instance as a preliminary step to the long and honorable career in the General Court of the Province and State.

Deacon Choate entered the General Court, as a representative from Ipswich, May 29, 1776. The Court held its session of this year in Watertown, since Boston had too recently been in the hands of the British soldiers. Ipswich was represented for that year by five members, and the representation of other towns was in the same proportion. The members of this Court were the first that had been elected in the Province without warrant of the King. It was the first time the Court was in session for the Commonwealth and not for the Province. In looking over the records of this Court one cannot fail to observe how large a proportion of its members had served in previous years. This circumstance alone is enough to show how directly the government of the Province tended to shape itself into the government of the State.

But Stephen Choate came to the General Court at this session a new member. He had secured the confidence of his fellow-townsmen, we may suppose, by his services on the Committee of Correspondence. That their confidence was well sustained by his action in the Court is made certain by the fact that he was returned as representative from Ipswich the following year, 1777, although the town sent but two members that year. He continued to represent the town in the lower House until 1779; from that time he was a member of the Senate.

MRS. MARY (LOW) CHOATE.

HON. STEPHEN CHOATE.

Aug. 9, 1779, the town of Ipswich elected five delegates to the Convention to be held at Cambridge for the purpose of framing a new Constitution of the State. Among these delegates were Stephen Choate, Esq., and Col. Jonathan Cogswell.

Vid. History of Essex, Mass., p. 223.

The name of Stephen Choate first appears upon the Records of the General Court as a member of the upper House, or Council, as it was then called, June 6, 1780. We may note here that so full of anxiety for the members of the Court were those days, that on the Saturday preceding, June 3, they had adjourned to meet at 8 A. M., the next morning to consider intelligence from the army. Accordingly, the records show that on June 4, Sabbath Day, the two Houses met at 8 A. M., and considered letters received. Just what had detained Mr. Choate from coming to the Council previous to June 6 can be conjectured only from the fact that on the 5th of May preceding he was appointed "a Committee to examine into the situation of the Light House at or near Gloucester, and make return thereof to the Honorable Council." This was, perhaps, the very first step towards the formation of the Lighthouse Board under the Federal Government. On the 23d of June, 1780, the examination ordered May 5, having been made and reported to the Council as required, "Hon. Stephen Choate Esq was authorized, empowered, and directed, in behalf of the State to take under his care the property of the State on Thatcher's Island." The next entry relating to this matter is of date June 8, 1781, and to the effect that the General Court "ordered that the Hon. Stephen Choate be discharged of monies received by him for articles sold belonging to the Light House on Thatcher's Island." That this order of the Court did not operate as a discharge in full of all responsibilities under the commission is plain from the fact that on Feb. 9, 1784, Stephen Choate was ordered "to pay into the Treasury the rents from Thatcher's Island."

Since 1781, the upper House of the General Court has been called the Senate, and its members have been chosen by the people. Essex County was entitled to four members in this body, and Stephen Choate was elected one of the four. He continued to serve as Senator from this time until 1797, when he was made Councillor. To this place he was elected by the General Court successively until 1803. Thus he gave to the State a continuous service in the General Court from the beginning of popular government, in 1776, until 1803, a term of twenty-seven years.

Of the part which was borne by the Hon. Stephen Choate in the routine business of the Legislature in these years we have space only to follow out one matter which throws additional light upon the record of Col. John Choate, who died in 1765. The records for Nov. 17, 1785, show "that on petition of Stephen Choate, Esqr., setting forth that pursuant to a grant of the Great and General Court unto the late John Choate, of Ipswich, there was surveyed and laid out a tract of land containing two hundred and fifty acres in Methuen, and confirmed in April, 1734; that the said John, by his deed with warranty, sold the same to Benjamin Greenleaf of Newbury." The petition continues to recite that when the boundary between Massachusetts and New Hampshire was, later, established by survey, this tract of land was found to be within the limits of the latter province. Of course, Greenleaf's title failed with the failure of the original grant. He had recourse, however, under the warranty, to the heirs of John Choate for satisfaction. They, in turn, could appeal, as they did, to the honor of the Commonwealth to make good its intent in the grant of 1734. In response to this call for relief, the General Court gave to Greenleaf, or his heirs, a grant of seven hundred acres of land, to be located in Cumberland County or Lincoln County, in the District of Maine. The location was made in the township of New Gloucester, in Cumberland County.

This petition, presented by Stephen Choate, in 1785, calls our attention to the particular service of John Choate for which the original grant was made by the Province in 1734. A reference to the records of the General Court for that year shows that, on Feb. 8, there was presented to the Court a "petition of Mr. John Choate, one of the Committee for North Yarmouth, showing that he has spent much time and made many journeys in the service of the said town, for which they are not able to make him any satisfaction," etc.; and praying for a grant of two hundred and fifty acres of land, the same to be located within the limits of the town of Methuen. This petition was granted by the Court, and was approved by J. Belcher, Governor.

The services to the town of North Yarmouth, referred to in the petition of John Choate, consisted in surveying the township, laying out the lots, and selling these to settlers. It is evident that the General Court had expected the inhabitants of the town to pay for these services. In town meeting assembled the inhabitants did not repudiate the claim upon them, but they simply pleaded their inability to pay it.

In addition to his long-continued service to the State in the capacity of Representative, Senator, and Councillor, Stephen Choate also served the County of Essex in various offices. He was elected Treasurer of the County in the Court of Sessions, at Salem, in 1793.

MRS. ELIZABETH (POTTER) CHOATE,
nee MARTIN.

For how long time he held this office the writer has no data at hand for determining, but he can reach a reasonable conclusion. The records of the General Court for 1813 show that, on Jan. 30, of that year, "Upon the petition of Stephen Choate, late Treasurer of the County of Essex, stating that he had received certain sums of money therein specified, in bills which have since depreciated, and praying relief; the Treasurer of this Commonwealth was authorised to receive these bills as money." From this circumstance it seems not unlikely that his term of service as treasurer of Essex County ended in 1812.

There can be little doubt that Stephen Choate had been largely concerned in town affairs before he took his seat as a member of the General Court, in 1776. He continued these more local duties and responsibilities while he served the County and the State. For many years he was a feoffee of the grammar school of Ipswich—an institution which was made perpetual by Act of the General Court, Feb. 14, 1787.

Hon. Charles Augustus Choate [926], a great-grandson of the Hon. Stephen Choate, now living in Jacksonville, Fla., has in his possession "The Book of Record of Actions Commenced agreeably to Act passed Feb'y 15th, 1787." This record covers the period from May, 1787, to July, 1790. It appears to have been kept by Stephen Choate as one of the justices of the courts.

Mr. C. A. Choate, of Jacksonville, has also the original will of the Hon. Stephen Choate, dated Jan. 4, 1799, giving his property to his "beloved wife, Elizabeth, and to his children, John, Amos, Miriam, David, Lydia (Randall), Mary (Brown), Elizabeth (Kingman), Martha (Hodgkins), Susannah, Isaac, and Stephen; also, to Betsey Day and Sally Potter, the daughters of his wife." It has been thought that Elizabeth, the wife of Stephen Choate, was previously the widow of Capt. John Potter.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE was fitted for college in Salem and his father desired him to graduate and become a minister, but his own tastes were in another direction, yet the influence of his education is plainly seen among his descendants to this day. Among his studies at Salem may have been navigation, for he was a master of that science. He was the captain of a ship when twenty-five years of age. He followed the sea to southern ports winters, and carried on the farm during the summers. He owned vessels as well as commanded them. He taught school on Hog Island, and when he was not the regular teacher he sometimes taught an evening school. He instructed his four sons in the art of navigation. They all followed the sea more or less. His son David Choate [231] went to Spain, when a young man, and also to southern ports; his son William [232] went to sea eight or ten years before his removal to Derry. George was a captain before he came from the Island, and Job was a captain between Europe and America for twenty years. It is said that Captain William gave his family a good education, and that although they lived on the Island they were better educated than most families in town. Mr. Rufus Choate, of Essex, the proprietor of the old homestead on the Island, has an arithmetic with problems and rules in geometry, trigonometry, and navigation, in the handwriting of Capt. William Choate, which is finely executed.

It is said of him that he was "The handsomest man on the Island, tall with black hair and dark complexion." Captain Choate was disinclined to public life; he was, however, collector and treasurer of the parish during the Revolutionary War. Although not himself a member of the church his letters show him to have been a thoughtful and serious-minded man.

Mrs. Mary Choate, in the matter of family government, it is said, used to bring the influence of bears and other wild animals to operate upon her children and grandchildren, especially when they indulged in playing on Sundays. Then she would tell them "that the bears would be after them." This would not especially terrify them until after sundown, but then they were afraid to go to bed, and were persuaded only when their grandmother assured them that "the bears were all gone away down to Agamenticus."

Mr. Rufus Choate, of Choate Island, has in his possession letters written by Captain William to his son, David Choate [231], which were written while the son was in the Continental Army. These letters were addressed "David Choate, Light Infantry Capt. John Burnham's Company, Col. Gimat's Regt. The Hon. Marquis La Fayette's Division Continental Army."

An incident is narrated of Mrs. Mary (Giddings) Choate. It appears that a British frigate was seen off the bay, and twelve men were stationed on Hog Island to prevent their landing. Her boats were seen approaching the Island, apparently for the purpose of landing, whereupon all on the Island fled except the wife of Capt. William Choate, who declared she would stay and keep house if all the others ran. Accordingly she remained with her two children, without harm.

Vid History of Essex, p. 219.

THE OLD FAMILY BIBLE belonging to Capt. William Choate came into the possession of his grandson William Choate, whose widow, Mrs. Lucretia Choate, gave it to Dr. George Choate of Salem, Mass., and it is now, 1894, in the possession of Hon. Joseph H. Choate of New York City. The family record is as follows:—

"WILLIAM CHOATE, (Son of Francis Choate) & Mary Giddings, (Daughter of Job Giddings) were married Jan'y 16th, 1756, & October 18th 1756 had a son born who lived but about four weeks. — Since had other children born (viz.)

SARAH CHOATE was born Saturday Sept. 26th 1772 in the morning

LIDIA CHOATE was born Saturday Sept 24th 1774 in the morning"

THE CHOATE HOUSE on "The Island" was struck by lightning Aug. 12, 1780, at about eight o'clock in the morning. There were six persons in the kitchen, one in the chamber, and four in the attic. The shock was seriously felt by them all, and Lydia, the youngest child, was thought to be dead, but her mother breathed into her mouth and after some time brought her to life. This stroke of lightning was the means of Margaret's conversion.

He married Sarah Potter, daughter of Aaron and Sarah (Appleton) Potter. She was born in Ipswich, Mass. They resided in Balltown, after 1772 in Wiscasset, and in Whitefield, Me. Mr. Choate was a tanner, and lived on "The Elliot Farm" in the north part of Leicester. He was chosen in 1774 one of the Selectmen of the Town. He was also a deacon in the Congregational Church. The history of Leicester confounds him with his son and seems to mention but one Isaac Choate, whereas there were father and son by the name of Isaac. Seven of their children were baptized in April, 1770. Mr. Choate marched on the alarm of April 19, 1775, with his company, as a Sergeant, as far as Cambridge. In 1776 he was commissioned as Second Lieutenant of Militia.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE, as the story goes, when a lad, was thrown from a horse and struck on his head, which seemed to cure his natural stupidity, and he became a very bright man. He was quick in temper, but after saying what his feelings prompted he would soon cool off. He lived in the house now owned by Mrs. Abby P. Choate, widow of Hon. George F. Choate, in Essex, Mass., a picture of which appears on a subsequent page.

"1791 July John Choate Esq. died of consumption in his fifty-fourth year." His wife, Mary, died Aug. 8, 1788, in her fifty-first year. He frequently held town offices, was feoffee of the grammar school, representative in 1781, 1783, 1785, 1786, 1788, and justice of the Sessions Court. "A man highly respected in public and private life for his abilities and integrity." Vid. Fell's History of Ipswich, Mass., p. 184, and History of Essex, Mass., pp. 238, 242.

Mr. Choate, together with Daniel Noyes, of Newbury, Michael Farley, and John Cogswell, was sent, Dec. 3, 1787, delegates to the convention that ratified and accepted the Federal Constitution. Essex County Institute, Vol. 4, p. 104.

John Choate, the oldest son, was imprisoned June 3, 1780. He was later the captain of a brig, and lost, Nov. 30, 1786, on the coast of France.

Francis Choate, the second son, died of fever, aged seventeen years.

Hannah Choate, the third daughter, died of consumption at the age of seventeen years, at the house of her aunt, Mrs. Lathrop, in Norwich, Conn. The following inscription is found on her tombstone in the cemetery of Norwich, Conn.:—

"In Memory of MISS HANNAH CHOATE, daughter of John Choate Esq., of Ipswich & Mrs. Mary his wife, who departed this life June 4th, 1784 in y<sup>e</sup> 18th year of her age."

*"A grassy turf o'er spreads my head
The neighboring lillies dress my bed
And shed a sweet perfume
Here: I put off the chains of death
My soul too long has worn.
Friends: I forbid one groaning breath
Or tear to wet my Urn."*

"March 4th 1767, Mr. Joseph Newman of Newburyport hath informed of his intention of marriage with Sarah Johnson of said Newburyport," which prior to 1764 was Newbury, Mass. "Married April 16th 1789, by Rev. John Andrews (Unitarian), John Choate, Esq. to Sarah Newman." Mrs. Sarah (Newman) Choate, née Johnson, became the third wife of Bradstreet Parker, of Groveland, Mass.

Vid. Records of Newburyport, Mass.

Mr. Parker was the great-great-grandfather of Mrs. Abby Parker (Cogswell) Choate, who now resides in the house where John Choate, Esq., once lived.

One of the family name playfully writes to another as follows:—

"Sarah Newman Choate-Parker was evidently a noted character, but she had no business to be married three or four times even if she was handsome. She evidently was a woman of vaulting ambition and meant to rival the woman in Scripture, who had seven husbands, and no doubt she confounded all the Sadducees in Essex County as to whose wife she would finally turn out to be.

"She also understood the dower business and made the most of it. She was the widow of Capt. Joseph Newman of Newburyport and of course had the Newman dower in her pocket, when she married Esquire John Choate. She went out of Chelacco with another monstrous dower, as Esquire George Choate could have testified with tears in his eyes. Whether she outlived and outwitted your ancestor, Bradstreet Parker, I know not, but I suppose death stepped in at some time and put a stop to further proceedings. She bewitched my grandfather so that he went to Newburyport to see her married to Esquire John. I hope that now 'after life's fitful fever she sleeps well.'"

"Sarah Parker died Aug. 15, 1820 aged 72 y. 9 mos."

HANNAH CHOATE.

Hannah<sup>4</sup> Choate (Francis<sup>3</sup>, Thomas<sup>2</sup>, John<sup>1</sup>), daughter of Francis [ 33 ] and Hannah (Perkins) Choate, was born April 1, 1739, in Chebacco, Ipswich, Mass. She married, Nov. 10, 1757, Rufus Lathrop, son of Col. Simon and Martha (Lathrop) Lathrop. He was born Oct. 29, 1731, in Norwich, Conn., where they resided. Mrs. Hannah Lathrop died April 18, 1785. Mr. Lathrop married, before 1788, Zerviah Lathrop, his cousin, daughter of Capt. Ebenezer and Lydia (Leffingwell) Lathrop. She was born May 6, 1738. Mr. Lathrop died Aug. 18, 1805. Mrs. Zerviah Lathrop died Jan. 4, 1795. There were no children.

Memoranda.

MR. LATHROP was a descendant of Governor Huntington, of Connecticut, and inherited some of his property. His father was a distinguished officer in the army of the Revolution. His sister, Martha Lathrop, married the Rev. Ebenezer Devotion, and after his death the Rev. James Cogswell, D. D., of Scotland Parish, Windham, Conn.

Vid. The Cogswells in America, pp. 117-120.

Mr. Lathrop was a man of wealth and leisure, of frail physical strength, but of pleasant disposition, and a large and generous heart. When a young man, on a visit to Rev. Mr. Cleaveland, of Chebacco, who was an acquaintance and friend, he was invited, with the minister of the parish, to take tea at Esquire Francis Choate's one afternoon, where he met for the first time Mr. Choate's lovely daughter, Miss Hannah Choate, in whom he at once became interested, and so much so, that before leaving, after tea, Mr. Lathrop asked if he could see the young lady alone. To his great astonishment she invited him into the kitchen, which was really the only unoccupied room at that time in the small house, as some of the family were ill, and the parlor was occupied by the rest of the family and the minister. However, Miss Choate was a well-educated and attractive young lady in dress and manners, as well as personal beauty. This interview was the beginning of a courtship which at length resulted in a happy marriage. Mrs. Lathrop was a superior woman, and very much esteemed in Norwich society, as well as beloved by her fond husband.

MRS. HANNAH (CHOATE) LATHROP.

RUFUS LATHROP, ESQ.

She had a wide acquaintance in Boston and elsewhere. Mrs. Griffin, the wife of Rev. Dr. Griffin, pastor of Park Street Church, was an intimate friend.

Mr. and Mrs. Lathrop had their portraits painted in oil. These were for a long time retained in the old homestead in Norwich, Conn., but recently were presented by a grand-niece of Mr. Lathrop's, Miss Lucretia Huntington Grace, to Mrs. Abby P. Choate, widow of Hon. George F. Choate, of Essex, Mass. These paintings now hang in Mrs. Choate's house, which stands next to the house in which Mr. Lathrop took an afternoon tea, and where he found his lovely bride.

It is said that the old Lathrop house in Norwich, Conn., is now a ruin.

A grand-niece of Mr. Lathrop quotes the following lines:—

"I seem like one who treads alone
In banquet halls deserted,
Whose lights are fled, whose garlands dead,
And all but me departed."

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE served in the war of the Revolution, as sergeant under Washington. He was by trade a cabinet maker. His marriage to Ruth Thompson is recorded in the records of the First Church in Salisbury, Mass. They settled in Salisbury, N. H., where his name appears on the tax list of 1775-76. Later, their house being consumed by fire, they made their home, in 1788, in Salisbury, Mass., where Mrs. Ruth Choate died, and Mr. Choate married for his second wife Hannah Norton, of Seabrook, N. H. They removed, and appear in 1802 as residents of Weare, N. H., where they remained a few years. A small stream flowed near where they lived, which was long known as "Choate Brook." It empties into the Piscataquoag River a little below East Weare. The house in which they lived has gone to decay; the old cellar remains near the place called the "Peaslee Stand." They probably returned to Salisbury, Mass., about 1818, for the transfer of his pension is recorded: "United States Pensioner Simeon Choate, Sergeant 1818 transferred from New Hampshire to Massachusetts, aged 68 years." Ibid. Essex County Register, p. 58.

Mr. Choate was a tall man, of fine bearing and handsome person. He dressed his hair in a queue, and wore short breeches with knee buckles, after the style of Washington, and men of that day.

His large family of children were all by the first marriage, and among their descendants are Morrills, Lowells, Todds, Dennetts, Dearborns, and Peaslees, names still familiar in Salisbury, Mass. Mr. Choate's death was sudden; he was driving some cattle that had strayed, belonging to a neighbor, Benjamin Joy, when he fell dead in the road, and his body was found about eleven o'clock the same evening by Dr. Carter, of Amesbury, Mass. Mrs. Hannah Choate survived him about ten years. The town record of Salisbury has this entry: "Simeon Choate Departed this life Sept. 22 1829 Aged 79 years."

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE, when a small boy, five years old, performed a feat of horsemanship by riding horseback from "The Island" to the head of the creek and back again alone, a distance of at least a mile and a half, the road always being partly under water. This showed the metal of the lad.

He went to sea in early life, and when twenty-one was known as Captain Choate. About the time of his marriage, he took charge of a vessel, and soon became its owner. He was for a few years very successful in the East Indian trade; and one fine Sunday morning, in full view of his father's house, where were his wife and two little children waiting his return from a sea voyage, his ship, with a large cargo of rum, sugar, molasses, and rice, all his own, was becalmed and went to the bottom, he and his crew barely escaping in their small boat. The vessel was old and unsafe, and he had intended this as his last voyage, having planned to convert his cargo and ship into land and become a farmer; but on arrival home, he found himself even with the world and ready to begin again. He engaged in tanning and shoemaking and was prospered, so that soon he made some investments in land in Boscawen, N. H.

About the time of the collapse of the Continental money, he was visited by a man on horseback who wished to purchase his place, which he then sold; and on completion of title and receipt of the money, the purchaser informed him that the bills were worthless on the sea-coast, and advised him to mount his horse and do as he had done, hasten to some place where the money was current. He went subsequently to Enfield, N. H., visited Canada in 1796, and on his return sold out to a Boston wholesale merchant by the name of Oliver Holden for $15,000, to be paid in goods for the Canada trade. He went down for his goods, found Holden bankrupt and in jail, got one thousand dollars' worth of codfish, and went in 1797 to Canada. He located in Glanford, nine miles from the city of Hamilton, with his four sons, Thomas, Jacob, Nathan, and James. Nathan died in 1813. The others left a goodly number of descendants, many of whom are living to-day in Canada and in the United States.

In the War of the Revolution, Mr. Choate seems to have joined an expedition to Rhode Island, Aug. 9 to Aug. 27, 1778. He was a private in Col. Moses Kelly's Regiment and Capt. Joshua Bagley's Company. Captain Bagley was of Hopkinton, N. H. Vid. New Hampshire Revolutionary Rolls, Vol. 2, p. 548.

Mr. Choate was a man of great physical power. He was six feet and three inches tall, and weighed two hundred and fifty pounds. It is narrated that on one occasion he went overboard to help raise a mast, and stayed in the water two hours on a cold March day.

Once his ship was filling with water, the men pumped until all were exhausted, and every one lay down but himself; and he threw the boat over alone which it took four men to handle, then threw the whole crew into the boat, jumped in himself just as the vessel went down, and brought them all safely to land.

He purchased fifteen hundred acres of land in Enfield, N. H., became involved, lost everything; even his horse was attached, and placed under a keeper. Mr. Choate threw the keeper down the scuttle, took the horse, and rode off.

Having some trouble in Chebacco he escaped to Boscawen, N. H. Three men went after him, but returned as they went, he refusing to go back alive.

Jacob Choate signed a petition dated June 3, 1779, for the town to have its old name of Enfield, instead of Kelhan, which was granted.

Vid. Town Papers, N. H., Vol. 11, pp. 612, 616.

"JACOB CHOATE emigrated to Canada with his family in 1798. He started from his home in New Hampshire in the depth of winter, and before their arrival in Canada passed through a series of difficulties and dangers scarcely understood and appreciated in these days of quick and luxurious locomotion.

"They journeyed with ox-teams and sleighs, and came west through the northern part of New York State, until they reached the Niagara River. Above the Falls the stream was found to be frozen over, but it being late in the day on arriving there, Mr. Choate concluded to wait until morning before crossing. At daybreak what was their dismay to find the ice on which they depended for a safe and easy passage of the river had disappeared during the night! But the head of the family did not despair. Having a little knowledge of the sailor's art, he determined to attempt the ford by means of an old flat-bottomed boat moored to the bank a short distance up the river.

"He first cut a long pole and lashed it firmly across the craft, letting the ends of the pole extend over the sides of the boat. This done, he drove an ox-team into the river, one on each side, up to the pole ends, which he fastened to the heads of the oxen, and by making them swim the river, the boat was thus propelled, the whole arriving in safety on the Canadian shore."

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE in his early manhood went from his Island home with his parents and younger brother in 1788 to Boscawen, N. H. They located only a few miles from the memorable spot where Mrs. Hannah Dustin, in January, 1697, so heroically dispatched her Indian captors and escaped the savages. A lineal descendant of this brave woman became the wife of this young pioneer in the woods of New Hampshire.

Mr. Choate before leaving Chebacco had learned the blacksmith's trade of his older brother, Thomas Choate [188].

He was twenty-seven years old when he married the young lady, who it is said was charming in person and lovely in character. And soon after they removed still further into the country, and settled in Enfield, N. H., where Mr. Choate owned a large tract of land on what is known as "George Hill." As years went on he became a thriving farmer, having many wide acres under the best of cultivation.

He kept a large stock of cattle, sheep, and horses; had barns, wood and carriage houses, all in keeping with his extensive farming operations. He had also shops for blacksmithing, for the manufacture and repairs of tools, carts, sleds, and all sorts of mechanical work necessary in carrying on the farm, these various buildings presenting quite a village-like appearance.

Mr. and Mrs. Choate betrayed of what stock they were by their spirit and fidelity in all the religious ways of the Puritans. For years they were accustomed to go on horseback six miles to attend church in Springfield, N. H. Their children, as they grew older, often walked the entire distance. His family all became members of the Congregational Church. And when at length a church was organized in Enfield, the town in which they lived, it was constituted quite largely of Colonel Choate and his family.

He was a man of commanding personal appearance, above the medium height, and well proportioned; of a muscular and robust build, but not corpulent; had a high and massive forehead, and a deep chest tone of voice, low in common conversation, but, when used with its full force, stentorian in its power, and having that peculiar quality of being distinctly heard at long distances, even when it did not seem loud to those immediately about him. Like many of the Choates of that time, he had great decision of character and a strong will, though always kept in perfect control by a sound judgment and the precepts of religion. He was grave and dignified in demeanor, had a fine presence, and, as has been said of another, "his very presence in an assembly seemed a call to order." He had an accurate judgment, was quick of apprehension, possessed a good memory, and had he enjoyed the benefits of a liberal education could not have failed to have been found among the most eminent of the land. Even in old age his reasoning was clear and logical, and his language choice.

Mr. Choate was a Justice of the Peace and Colonel of militia at a time when the war with England of 1812 caused the people to take great pride and interest in military matters, and the Militia Muster, or general training in the fall, and the March Meeting, or town election in the spring, divided honors with Fourth of July and Thanksgiving as holidays, at which all, great and small, rich and poor, met to show their patriotism, celebrate the day, eat gingerbread, and have a social, and sometimes hilarious, visit with friends and neighbors.

It was on one of these occasions, probably town meeting, that an incident occurred which shows the power which Colonel Choate's commanding presence and powerful voice had over a boisterous and unruly crowd. A number of the rougher sort, who had probably taken a fancy to mix their gingerbread with too much New England rum, became very loud in their discussions, and commenced to use arguments more muscular than intellectual, when another Justice of the Peace, a man of small stature with an effeminate soprano voice, commenced to hop around among them, trying to quell the riot, crying out in his thin wiry voice, "Don't fight, boys, don't fight! don't fight!! don't fight!!!" but they fought all the more, answering his well-meant efforts with jeers and shouts of derision. At this time Colonel Choate appeared on the scene of action, and vociferated in tones like distant thunder, "I command you in the name of the State of New Hampshire to disperse!!!" Immediately all was still as death, such awe and terror even did his voice and character inspire in evil-doers. Ever afterward "Don't fight, don't fight," was a by-word with "the boys."

Another story is told of the power of his voice which is more difficult of belief, though the person who told it insisted it was literally true. He said that being himself on East Hill, in Enfield, one general training day, he distinctly heard the Colonel give the word of command while drilling his regiment on Canaan Street, fully five miles distant. Whether true or not, it shows the prevailing opinion of the Colonel's vocal powers. Yet he was one of the coolest and most even tempered of men, seldom showing any irritation, and never giving others any just cause for any. He very rarely punished any of his children, the simple word "boys," uttered in his peculiar tone, being generally sufficient to subdue any rebellious or turbulent spirit among them. I have heard his son Samuel say that he never struck him but one blow, and that, as it proved, without cause. Some tool or implement could not be found, and each boy denied any knowledge of it, when he gave each a single blow, probably not very heavy, and doubtless soon repented of, for I think he found the article had been mislaid, and the boys were not to blame.

Colonel Choate's wife was every way his equal. She was a most amiable, capable, and beautiful woman. She was a descendant of the Pilgrims, and reared almost within sight of the Island in the Merrimack River, where her ancestress, the heroic Mrs. Hannah Dustin, slaughtered with her own hand the cruel savages, who had carried her captive from Haverhill, Mass., through forests and deep trackless snows, and made good her escape. Mrs. Choate was brought up under the ministry of the venerable Dr. Wood, and early converted to Christ. She became a fine example of Christian womanhood, a faithful wife, and a devoted mother. Colonel and Mrs. Choate, in their early married life, were characterized as the handsomest couple in the town; their eight children all lived to grow up, and, like their parents, were exemplary Christians. The married life of this amiable pair extended over the long period of sixty-five years. They were respected and beloved by all who knew them. They both died in the old house where they had lived so long; Mrs. Choate, in the eighty-seventh year of her age, and Colonel Choate, a few months later, at the great age of ninety-two years and seven months. They were buried in the family burying ground in Enfield, N. H.

Memoranda.

MISS HANNAH CHOATE was a young lady of seventeen years, when occurred, May 10, 1780, Friday, the famous "Dark Day." The following is her account of it:—

"The sun rose clear, but soon began to be lowery with some showers. Toward nine o'clock, it seemed to be breaking away; but everything had a yellow appearance. Soon after nine, a dark heavy cloud was seen rising from the northwest, which gradually spread itself until it covered the whole heavens, except a narrow space near the horizon. About ten, this was also covered, and the darkness increased so that we had to light a candle. All the folks out of doors left their work and came in. Fear and anxiety were manifest on every countenance.

"It was quite dark when we set our dinner table. Early in the afternoon the darkness began to abate, and before sundown it was light, but cloudy with a yellow, brassy appearance. After sundown it grew dark very fast and the evening was more remarkable than the day.

"It seemed like darkness that might be felt. Some of our family who tried to go to the neighbors had to come back. We sat up quite late, knowing that the moon rose at nine, and expecting it would make some difference as to the darkness, but it did not till after eleven o'clock, when some glimmer of light began to appear from it."

Memoranda.

RICHARD KIMBALL, the great ancestor of Mr. Kimball, set sail April 10, 1634, with his wife and seven children for America. They came on board the ship "Elizabeth," and settled first in Watertown, but in 1637 removed to Ipswich, Mass., where to the present time his descendants have been numerous and prominent in town and church.

Mr. Kimball, who married Lois Choate, was a much-respected citizen, and an officer of the South Church, in Ipswich, Mass. They reared a large family in the godly ways of the fathers. It is said "that he sat with eleven of his children in the choir, while his twelfth child, with its mother, was an appreciative listener in the family pew." Many of these twelve children lived to a remarkable age, so that the aggregate of their ages was eight hundred and eighty-six years, an average of nearly seventy-four years. Mrs. Cata (Kimball) Heard was the last survivor. She died Nov. 13, 1885, at the age of ninety-seven years.

Jeremiah and Lois (Choate) Kimball's descendants, in number about eighty, met in 1888 in old Ipswich to observe the one hundred and thirty-eighth anniversary of their ancestor Jeremiah Kimball's birth, who was born June 11, 1750.

In response to a sentiment relative to the future of the family, among others offered on the occasion, some lines were read of which an extract runs as follows:—

"I have been asked to prophesy,
Or I should better say to try,
And make the seer's prediction
As to what
The tribe of Jeremiah
In the future may aspire,
Or hold as their heart's desire
And all that.

"We are children of that mother,
Purer, holier, lived no other
Than our sainted ancestor,
Mother Lois;
Consecrating her whole line,
Till the very end of time,
To a service all divine;
This her choice.

"If the records can be trusted,
And the virtues have not rusted,
Which were our inheritance;
I should say
That the tribe of Jeremiah
Will be able to stand fire,
E'en as did their worthy sire
Any day.

"With due reverence for our sires,
And the race of Jeremiahs,
Still like them we would not be
While we live,
Buried in the out-grown past,
Holding creeds and dogmas fast,
Out of which the life has passed,
Naught to give.

"If rectitude and Godly fear
Won for our race the nom de guerre
Of the 'Royal Family,'
We should be Worthy and illustrious heirs
Of the kingdom which was theirs,
Holding it in equal shares.
Should not we?

"But with reverent waiting ear,
Listen that we too may hear,
As the prophets did of old,
Truth's decree.
For the last word is not said;
All the prophets are not dead;
Nor have all the martyrs bled.
We shall see."

LOWELL CHOATE.

The descendants of this family observed their fourth triennial reunion Sept. 29, 1891, at the beautiful summer residence of David B. Kimball, Esq., a grandson of Deacon Jeremiah Kimball, in Manchester by the Sea. There were present on the occasion seventy-nine of the more than two hundred surviving descendants. This reunion was most enthusiastic and pleasurable. The number of grandchildren was only fourteen, and of these several have died in the intervening five years.

NATHANIEL LORD, who married Eunice Kimball, was the son of Isaac and Susannah (Lord) Lord. He was born Sept. 25, 1780, in Ipswich, Mass., and graduated in 1798 from Harvard College. Mr. Lord for many years was the Register of Probate for Essex County. His sons were eminent men, viz., Nathaniel James Lord, Esq., Hon. Otis Phillips Lord, and George R. Lord, Esq.

NATHANIEL JAMES LORD, ESQ.

NATHANIEL JAMES LORD, ESQ., was an able lawyer, a man of eminent learning and commanding ability in his profession. At the Essex Bar he stood in the front rank with such men as Saltonstall and Choate. A written sketch of this eminent man is not at hand. The reader must be content with what is inscribed on his noble face.

Hon. Otis P. Lord, a younger brother of the foregoing, was regarded by Hon. Rufus Choate as the ablest lawyer in Essex County.

George R. Lord, Esq., who survived his two brothers, was an estimable man of ability, and much respected in the community. He was for some years the Assistant Clerk of Courts in Essex County.

Samuel Kimball was a prominent citizen of Dunbarton, N. H. Deacon Charles Kimball, late of Concord, N. H., and David B. Kimball, Esq., a well-known lawyer of Salem, Mass., were his sons.

Col. Charles Kimball, the youngest son of Jeremiah and Lois (Choate) Kimball, was a resident of Ipswich, Mass., and much engaged for many years in the Probate business of Essex County, with an office in Salem, Mass. Judge White, of the Probate Court, said of him, "No man was better fitted than Colonel Kimball for Judge of Probate."
Vid. History of Essex County, Vol. 1, pp. 661-3.

OTIS PHILLIPS LORD, LL. D.

Otis Phillips Lord, son of Hon. Nathaniel and Eunice (Kimball) Lord, was born July 11, 1812, in Ipswich, Mass. He fitted for college at the Dummer Academy, Byfield, Mass., and entered Amherst College in 1828, graduating in 1832, subsequently receiving the degrees of Master of Arts and Doctor of Laws from his Alma Mater. He graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1836, having been admitted to the Bar in the December of 1835.

He commenced the practice of the law in Ipswich, his native town, but in 1844 removed to Salem, where he had an extensive law practice until his appointment upon the Bench. He served in the House of Representatives five years, the last year, 1854, being elected Speaker, and one year in the State Senate. In 1853 he was a member of the Constitutional Convention. Upon the organization of the Superior Court, in 1859, Mr. Lord was appointed by Gov. N. P. Banks as Associate Justice. This position he held until appointed by Governor Gaston, in 1875, as Associate Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, which office he held until compelled, Dec. 8, 1882, by ill health, to resign. Judge Lord died on Thursday, March 13, 1884.

On the following day the Essex Bar Association met and appointed a committee to prepare a Memorial of the lamented dead, to be presented to the Supreme Judicial Court at its next meeting, which was presented, April 24, 1884, by Mr. Alfred A. Abbott, in behalf of the committee, Chief Justice Morton presiding. This was followed by highly eulogistic remarks by other legal gentlemen, of whom were Messrs. William D. Northend, Charles P. Thompson, Daniel Saunders, and Chief Justice Morton. The Memorial was ordered to be placed upon the records of the Court.

This Memorial recites briefly the incidents of his life, positions filled, and then says: "Judge Lord was cast in a large and heroic mould. All the powers of his nature were upon a broad scale. Even his prejudices, emotions, and passions were after the strong type of his intellectual faculties. And he had his nurture in a grand school. Beginning his practice in a neighborhood, then somewhat famous for its litigation, and the nature of which required a delving among the very roots of the common law, and gradually working his way into causes which involved the larger issues and more liberal principles of the law merchant, he soon came to measure his strength with a band of lawyers, competition with whom could not fail to arouse all his latent energies, and who, as we look back upon them, now loom up in the past in almost colossal proportions."

The Memorial then enumerates Messrs. Leverett Saltunstall, Nathaniel J. Lord, an older brother of the deceased, Joshua H. Ward, Asahel Huntington, and Rufus Choate. "These were the teachers of Judge Lord, in daily conflict with whom he had his professional training, and under the inspiration of whose example every faculty of his nature found its full development."

Perhaps of all those who in times past have been foremost at the Essex Bar, and those whose fame rests upon their laurels won here, Judge Lord, by general consent, stands primus inter pares, whether we consider the extent and variety of his practice, his ample learning, his union of tact and skill with energy and force, his marvellous ability to deal with and solve the most complicated questions of law and fact, his control over the minds of men by the might of pure reason enforced by a vehement and fervid eloquence, or by the signal success which crowned his work. He had a Scotch acumen and keenness of perception, and at the same time a capacity for the broad view, the wide comprehension, and the firm grasp of the largest outlines of a subject, his strength lay in the well-balanced combination and signal discipline of all his mental gifts.

But whatever may have been the intellectual secrets of his success, they gained added effect from the moral qualities of the man. His moral honesty was organic, and it was transparent. Judge Lord was a great lawyer, a powerful advocate, a wise legislator, a strong, sound judge, a firm friend, and an honest Christian man.

Vid. In Memoriam of Otis P. Lord.

The Bar of the Commonwealth, before the Supreme Federal Court in Boston, passed resolutions and eulogistic remarks, March 22, 1884, which were entered upon the records of the court.

Memoranda.

CAPT. WILLIAM BROWN was in the War of 1812. He bought half a brig for the West India trade, procured Spanish papers, and took a Spaniard, Blanco, by name, as nominal captain, while Brown himself shipped as a passenger. The Spanish American Revolution was then in progress. Their vessel was captured by a privateer of the insurgent states, as a Spanish vessel. Papers all right, a prize, and ordered her to the nearest Mexican port for adjudication or condemnation. Brown and Blanco, were allowed to remain on board, as prisoners to be landed, the rest of the crew were enlisted on the privateer. Confined to the steerage, they were so quiet that in a few days they were allowed to go on deck under restrictions. They planned a scheme to retake the ship; noticing the arising of a sudden "flaw" striking the foresail, and all the crew and captain having rushed forward to save it. Brown and Blanco stepped into the cabin, armed themselves, returned on deck, and hauling the prize captain allowed him three minutes to decide whether he would surrender the ship or fight. He chose to fight, but with axes and handspikes against pistols and cutlasses, it was unequal, and in a short time the ship was surrendered and carried to Boston, where it was kept to the close of the war.

William Brown and his brother, John Brown, were sea captains and both died at sea.

Nehemiah Brown, the youngest son of Nehemiah and Mary (Choate) Brown, married Susannah Smith, who was born Dec. 21, 1796, in Ipswich, Mass., where they resided. Mr. Brown died Nov. 30, 1859. ### Memoranda.

Mr. HODGKINS has a granddaughter, Miss Martha A. Hodgkins, residing in Bath, Me. She has a family relic, an old painting, purporting to be the Choate Arms. It is very old, and has been handed down from generation to generation, without proof of its genuineness or even a tradition of its origin. But from the peculiar form of the shield and the great delicacy of the workmanship, it might be classed as the production of Nathaniel Hurd, who from 1750 to the time of his death, in 1777, was one of the most prominent Colonial engravers engaged on heraldic subjects; or, possibly it may belong to those arms totally devoid of authority which were manufactured by one John Coles, of Boston, who, it is said, "probably as early as 1776, undertook to supply all inquirers with their family arms at a moderate cost."

Vid. Elements of Heraldry, pp. 72-7.

Mr. Hodgkins was doubtless a descendant of, or relative of, Col. Joseph Hodgkins, of Ipswich, Mass. The will of Thomas Hodgkins, who may have been his father, dated Sept. 1, 1797, makes his beloved wife, Martha, his sole executrix, leaving her his dwelling-house and land in Ipswich, bounded on one side by land of Dr. Manning and Mrs. Cogswell, and a third part of personal estate, the other two thirds to be equally divided between all his children.

Vid. Hammatt Papers, pp. 135, 136.

Miss Martha A. Hodgkins's mother, the second wife of Nehemiah Hodgkins, died March 7, 1875.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE had very limited advantages of education in the public schools. But he wrote a good hand, used language correctly, and acquired much facility in doing business. He kept to his father's farm until twenty years of age, and acquired habits of industry and strength of muscle. He engaged in fishing and in the West India trade until the business was interrupted by the War of 1812.

By his thrift he added to his landed estate so that his farm embraced the original home place bequeathed by Col. John Choate to Deacon Stephen Choate, Hovey's Island, the Boardman place, and one half of Treadwell's Island, once owned by Governor Treadwell. He also owned in part, or wholly, several schooners.

He was a Justice of the Peace, Selectman, Overseer of the Poor, and in 1816, 1819, 1820, and 1823, four years, a Representative to the General Court. His abilities were recognized and he had much to do in public affairs. He was a strong partisan of the Federal School, and associated much with Josiah Quincy, Mr. Phillips, and other prominent men of the State.

When his maritime business was interrupted by the Embargo Acts he was trying to dispose of his shipping. With the assistance of his neighbors he succeeded in sending two of his vessels out of port with some foreign destination. These transactions were said to be "outside of the law." One vessel, called the "Dove," was at night tied up to a bridge at the mouth of Boardman's Creek. In the morning she was gone, and the popular word passed around was that she had sunk in "the deep hole" over which she was moored. But Capt. William Brown had taken her out in the night with a cargo for Bermuda, or some of the West Indies. After some weeks Captain Brown returned, but great secrecy was maintained and it was not known whether he sold the ship or she was taken by some government cutter. Another vessel, the "Britannia," was loaded at the landing for the West Indies, hauled into the offing, and should have sailed at once. But too high wind kept her at anchor until the Custom House Officers boarded her and she was obliged to return to the landing, where she lay under bond until the embargo was off, and then sailed. Mr. Choate, it is said, was on board, and seeing the Officers of Revenue approaching, seized an axe and rushed forward to cut the cable, for he preferred any hazard to being held up by the officers. The captain and crew, however, interfered and overpowered him, and so prevented him in his purpose.

Mr. Choate, while of resolute will, was a wise and good man, careful in word and deed, able, useful, and upright. He ruled his children, and those within his influence and power, strictly, but not more strictly than he ruled his own spirit. And whatever he did he acted from a high motive and for a valuable end.

Mrs. Elizabeth Choate was a very estimable woman. Her father, John Baker, son of Colonel John and Mary Baker, died June 9, 1785. Her mother, Mrs. Eunice (Pope) Baker, lived to the age of ninety-four years, and died Jan. 10, 1821.

"Here let the weary pilgrim rest
Till God shall call; and he that goodness blest
Which so prolonged her useful life
And gave her peace midst 'Nature's dying strife.'"

Mrs. Choate was buried in the Choate tomb, in the South Cemetery, Ipswich, Mass.

Mrs. Mary Choate came into possession of the house built and once occupied by the Rev. Theophilus Pickering, the successor of Rev. John Wise, which her father, Col. Jonathan Cogswell, bought in 1791. Her mother was a granddaughter of the Rev. John Wise. Mrs. Mary Choate survived her husband more than twenty years. Mr. Charles Choate, a son of the first marriage, speaking of her, says: "Whom I regard as the best of stepmothers." Mr. Choate and Mrs. Mary Choate were buried in the Cogswell tomb in the Essex Cemetery. Vid. History of Essex, Mass., p. 287.

Rev. Mr. Pickering, mentioned above, was visited in the same house by the noted Rev. George Whitfield, and engaged in a long discussion with him, but refused Mr. Whitfield admittance to his pulpit.

A JOURNAL KEPT BY DAVID CHOATE.

Began November 29th, 1778.

Which date completes twenty one years of my age. I have been in a low state of health about two years, not able to do any work in the Summer time since Ju'y one thousand seven hundred & seventy seven.

I agreed about this time viz: Nov. 1778, to keep school in Chebacco for four months; boarded two months at uncle John Choat's then one at Mr. Jonathan Cogswell's; the fourth month at uncle's again, in March the school broke up; & I agreed to go a fishing the ensuing season in my uncle John Choate's boat, about this time a large number of people had the small pox at Col. Jonathan Cogswell's house; and Nehemiah Choate of Hog Island died of that distemper the nineteenth of March.

APRIL, 1779. — We began upon the aforesd. fishing voyage;

The boat goes a freighting & I work at a spell, prove not so healthy as a fishing; I am advised by the Doctor to go to Europe for my health; accordingly I agreed to go in the ship "Rambler," Benjamin Lovett, Commander, bound to Spain. I got my clothes & adventure on board; but was taken sick just before the ship sailed so that I could not go the voyage.

Mr. Choate was married a second time in the fall of 1791, and the next spring, May 11, 1792, established his home on the Island, where he continued to live until April 9, 1800, when he removed to the main land to a place which he had purchased, once owned by the Rev. Mr. Cleaveland. There he spent the few years that remained to him of life. He died in the full maturity and strength of his manhood at the age of fifty years. A very just and appreciative notice of Mr. Choate by Dr. Reuben D. Muzey was published in the Salem Gazette of that date as follows: —

“Mr. Choate was a man of uncommon intellectual endowments. To a quick and accurate perception, a ready and full recollection, he added a judgment ever ready to decide, and was never under the necessity of making more than one decision on the same subject. From childhood, books were among his dearest companions, and though denied the advantages of a regular education, he arrived at a degree of improvement often unattained by men of the present opportunities and possessed talents which would have been an honor to a statesman.

“In the social circle, none were his superiors. Without any efforts to draw attention, he had the admiration of all around him; and if envy herself ever raised a sigh at his power of pleasing, she immediately lost it in a less ungenerous emotion, — the love of being pleased.

“The learned found instruction and amusement in his company, and the ignorant went away satisfied that they were persons of information because they had been conversing easily on subjects before unknown to them. His friendship was firm and unalating. The man who possessed his confidence had a safe deposit for the most important facts, and such facts gained much in value by being thrown into such a deposit.

“As a husband he was all that the best of wives could desire, as a father, all that a fine family of children could need. He lived the friend and supporter of virtue, order and steady habits, and died in hope of a happier state through the mercy of a Redeemer. A widow, five children and the whole town lament his death.”

This exalted tribute was deserved. Mr. Choate was a man whom everyone was glad to meet. Esquire Lord, father of the late Judge Lord, once said to Dr. Scwall, “If you go to Chebacco, be sure to see Mr. David Choate, as he is the only man there is there.”

Had Mr. Choate's life been spared he would doubtless have been brought much into public life. His townswen had fixed upon him as their next Representative to the General Court, but before the time came for his election he was taken ill and died.

While not a member of the church, he was a person of deep religious impressions. And when death was near some one asked him how he felt in the near prospect of death. He replied that “the hope he had cherished for a long time grew stronger and brighter.”

Vid The History of Essex, Mass., pp. 266-8.

Washington Choate, son of Mr. Choate, died at the age of nineteen years, while a member of the Junior Class in Dartmouth College. Young Choate “gave evidence of deep piety and was a scholar of extraordinary promise.”

Vid. History of Ipswich, Mass., p. 275.

Rev. Dr. Dana styled him “the finest youth in New England.”

Vid. History of Essex, Mass., pp. 295-7.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE was a man of recognized ability and character. He was called to fill many public offices, and much employed by his fellow-townsmen in the management of their affairs, and had their fullest confidence and esteem. He was a Justice of the Peace. Representative from Ipswich in 1814, '15, '16, '17, and from Essex in 1819, to the General Courts, and sustained various other offices in the town. At the time of his death the following tribute was paid to his worth:—

"To a strength and purity of mind, there was united a quiet, peaceful, and amiable disposition, which greatly endeared him to his friends and acquaintances; so mindful was he of the rights and feelings of others, that as he never made an enemy, so certainly he has not left one; and we cannot but admire and wish to imitate that discipline of mind and feeling, which he so eminently manifested, and which enabled him to perform the duties, and sustain the fatigues and ills of life without a murmur or complaint. The virtues of honest fidelity and benevolence will not perish with the body—for the upright and faithful there remaineth a rest." "His life was useful and his death lamented."

Memoranda.

MR. BAKER when a young man crossed the creek to Hog Island on a courting expedition. There were at that time no less than sixteen marriageable young ladies on the Island by the name of Choate, "all exceeding fair." With no little embarrassment the young man looked about, and making a bold push, said to one of the fond mothers at last: "I've come a courting, which girl shall I take?" The goodly matron, scanning him somewhat closely, replied, after the manner of Laban of old, "I guess you might as well take Mary as she is the oldest now." But in this instance the oldest, although Mary by name, for black eyes and beauty was a very Rachel indeed, so that Thomas did not demur, but accepted the choice made for him and proceeded to make love to the beautiful maiden. He was successful in his suit and in due time there was a wedding, and the happy pair rode off in a two-wheeled chaise, the first vehicle of the kind ever seen on the Island.

This was in 1791, and within no very long period fifteen other spruce young men paddled across the creek from Ipswich town, each in turn to find in this isolated place a rosy-checked damsel for a wife, showing that in their judgment the sweetest fruit grows on the outermost bough. Indeed, so fashionable was it at that period to go to the Island for a wife that when these sixteen pretty girls were all married, one old patriarch, who had seen his seventh and last daughter wedded and carried off, it is said, with great emotion exclaimed: "I do believe they'll come for my wife next."

Mr. Baker was a silversmith, or as then called a "whitesmith." He manufactured silver spoons and the like. Some of his make are still in existence. He died in early manhood from lockjaw, occasioned by an injury to his foot with an axe.

Mrs. Baker survived her husband for more than fifty years, outlived all her brothers and sisters, and was the last one of the children of Capt. William Choate to pass away. "Her memory is blessed."

There is an oil-painted portrait of her in the possession of her grandson, John Choate, Esq., of Fitchburg, Mass.

David Baker, the second son, married a Mrs. Cheever, of Salem, Mass. He was a manufacturer of nautical instruments for many years in New Bedford, Mass. He died sitting in his chair.

Nathaniel P. Baker was a wholesale dealer in drygoods in Boston, Mass.

There is an ancient family Bible, from which are copied the following inscriptions:—

"Ipswich, Jan. 1753. This Book Was Given by Father Low to His four Daughters that is Story, Low, Giddinge and Low."

"Mary Choate Her hand, Mother Giddinge Gave me her  $\frac{1}{4}$  Part of this Book when She went to Luneing Burge."

"Mary Baker was born 1767. She inherits this Book from her Mother Choate's right."

"John Choates Book Given him by his Grandmother Baker, for a New Year's present 1850, January 1st."

Memoranda.

MR. SMITH of Ipswich was the accepted lover of another of the sixteen lovely maidens whose homes were on the Island. The wedding day dawned Jan. 10, 1793, but a violent storm was raging, and the heaving tide and the floating ice in the river rendered things quite uncertain. The bride that was to be, her wardrobe being in readiness, having an industrious spirit, common in those days, put herself down to her footwheel, plied her busy hands and feet until she had spun her twenty knots, and midday had come. The clouds then broke away, the sun came out, and shortly the bridegroom, Parson Cleaveland, and the wedding party put in appearance, and all went merry as a marriage bell.

The bride was rosy and beautiful, and none thought the less of her for the morning's work, but more: and to this day it is told as a memorial of her how the lovely Hannah made the footwheel spin on her wedding day.

Memoranda.

LYDIA CHOATE, who became Mrs. Perkins, when a small girl, was one of the eleven persons who were struck by the lightning in the old Choate house on the Island. She was one of the five in the attic, and was carried down-stairs by her brother to her mother with these words, "Lydia is dead!" Her mother, however, by most persistent efforts, succeeded in bringing her back to life.

Mrs. Perkins was a woman of gentle and retiring disposition, possessed of an excellent judgment and of great firmness of character. Her Christian influence was a great inspiration to her husband and very potent with her children, creating in them a deep and tender reverence. Mr. and Mrs. Perkins resided, during their early married life, in the old house called the "Martin House," on the ancient farm of John Choate: the house long since was taken down. Later they removed and occupied a house near the Congregational Church.

Mr. Perkins was a manufacturer of leather and shoes, and was associated with his brother, James Perkins, in that business for many years.

They had two children, a son, who was accidentally and instantly killed when a young lad, and a daughter, Caroline, a young lady of great loveliness of person and character, who died in early life. Mrs. Spofford survived her husband and children, and died Jan. 25, 1892. Jacob Perkins Spofford, their second son, was a ship-builder. He was born Sept. 29, 1829; married Mary B. Parker, of Dedham, Me., and died Sept. 1, 1873, in Salisbury Point, Mass. He was a man of noble qualities and Christian character. Mrs. Mary B. Spofford, his widow, married, some years later, Myron G. Gilmore, Esq., a banker. They resided in San Diego, Cal. Laura Spofford, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Uriah G. Spofford, born May 20, 1835; married, Nov. 26, 1857, James T. Reeve, M. D. He was a graduate in medicine and surgery, and has had a very successful practice for many years. They reside in Appleton, Wis. Mrs. Reeve's parents, in later life, removed from the East and made their home with her in Appleton, Wis. In 1885 they celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage, and a few weeks later Mr. Spofford died, at the age of eighty-six years. Mrs. Spofford died July, 1890.

Dr. and Mrs. Reeve have three children living, viz., James Spofford, graduated from Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis., in 1885, and in 1890 from the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York. He was for a year and a half connected with the Methodist Episcopal Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y., travelled and studied abroad for a year; and is in practice with his father in Appleton, Wis. He married, in 1891, Alfreda B. Noyes, of Georgetown, Mass. Katharine Mary, their only daughter, is a senior, class of 1896, in Lawrence University. He went at once into the army, and was soon commissioned Captain of Company A, Thirty-third Regiment, Illinois Infantry. After two years' service he resigned, and became Superintendent of the public schools of Bloomington, Ill. In 1865 he assumed the editorship of the Bloomington Pantagraph, and for the last twenty-eight years he has been contracting agent for the King Bridge Company, of Cleveland, Ohio. He married, in 1866, Almira S. Ives, of Bloomington, Ill., where they reside. They have no children.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE lived in a place named Malta, but in 1820 named Gerry, and in 1822 called by its present name, Windsor, Me. It was on the east boundary line of Augusta, four miles from the Kennebec River.

There is a thrilling incident told in connection with the purchase and survey of the lot on which Mr. Choate lived. It was Sept. 8, 1809, when he was engaged with others in the survey and fixing the topography of a brook. Choate walked a short distance ahead, when he was surprised by several armed men, in the disguise of Indians. A pistol was placed at his breast, and his silence ordered on pain of instant death. A few minutes later Paul Chadwick of Malta, one of the chain bearers, appeared in view. Word being given, "Fire low," three guns were discharged, and Chadwick fell, mortally wounded. He died two days later. No hostility was shown to Choate. It appeared subsequently to have been the fact that the murdered man, Chadwick, was one of a band associated under the name of "Malta Indians," who were bound by an oath, written and signed with blood, to prevent surveys and resist proprietors in enforcing claims to the lands, and because of this, was regarded as a traitor, deserving death, because of having violated his oath. There were eight persons tried as concerned in this crime, but on some technicality were discharged. But there was enacted a State statute making it a high crime for any person to disguise himself in the likeness of an Indian with intent to molest a sheriff or surveyor in the discharge of his duties. But the disgrace which attached to "Malta" so ashamed the inhabitants that in 1820 they induced the first Legislature of the State to change its name to Gerry, and in 1822, to obliterate the old disgrace more completely, they had the name changed to Windsor.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE was but a lad when his father removed with his family from Chebacco, Ipswich, to Leicester, Mass. He passed his youth upon the farm, and later learned the manufacture of card-clothing, which was made quite a business by the Choates in Leicester, and afterward in Lansingburg, N. Y. They used machines for perforating the leather and gave out the wire to be inserted by hand, thus giving employment to many families.

In the autumn of 1790 Mr. Choate and his brother Isaac, with others, thirty-six young men in all, from the various towns of that region, formed an association called "THE OHIO LAND COMPANY," with the design of making a settlement in the State of Ohio.

The location selected was called "Big Bottom," on the eastern bank of the Muskingum River, about thirty miles above the present site of Marietta. This tract of land extended along the river a distance of five miles, reaching back a half or three quarters of a mile to the base of hills. It was a choice and fertile spot.

On their arrival Mr. Choate and his brother commenced operations immediately, although advised to wait until spring by those who knew the habits of the Indians, whose war-path from Sandusky to the mouth of the Muskingum River passed directly through this country; and along the ridge on the western bank of the river, this chosen spot for the new settlement was in full view.

The first work was to build a large block-house as a place of protection and defence from the Indians. This was constructed of beech and birch logs, and being completed the Choates put up a cabin for themselves about twenty rods away to the north, and back from the river, and then proceeded to clear their lots.

James Patton and a hired man, Thomas Shaw, lived with the Choates in their cabin. A few rods south of the block-house Asa and Eleazar Bullard had fitted up and occupied a cabin that had been deserted. There had been organized no system of defence, not even an alarm guard. The river had become frozen over, and the second day of January, 1791, was mild and pleasant. A band of some twenty-five Indians were on their way to destroy the "Waterford settlement," unaware of the new beginning made in Big Bottom by the white men. Following their war-path along the ridge on the west bank of the river the new settlement came into their view. Moving up the river a short distance they crossed on the ice, and entering unobserved they came down suddenly upon the young men while at supper, quite unsuspecting of such intrusion. They entered the door of the Choates' cabin first and made prisoners of the four occupants. While this was being done others of the Indians attacked the block-house. A tall, stout Indian opened the door and planted himself against it. At the first discharge of guns by the Indians several fell dead; resistance was out of the question; the men were unprepared and helpless. But a strong, resolute backwoods Virginia woman, the wife of Isaac Meeks, seized an axe and struck the tall Indian who stood at the door. He turned his head and thus saved his skull, but the axe passed down through his cheek into his shoulder, making a hideous gash; but before the blow could be repeated the brave woman was shot down and the Indians rushed in and killed all who remained except a lad of sixteen years, Philip Stacey, who hid himself under the bed-clothes. He was discovered, however, soon after, and as the Indians raised their tomahawks to kill him he threw himself at the feet of the chief and begged him to spare his life. Touched with pity, the Indian warrior saved the lad's life.

While this terrible massacre was going on the two Bullards in the south cabin managed to escape, and fled to the next settlement, a distance of four miles, and gave the alarm. It was a dreadful night among the settlers all along the Muskingum River. The people either made hasty flight, or when that was impossible put themselves in a state of defence, and, half dead with terror, watched until the morning came.

The Indian to whom Mrs. Meeks gave such a blow with the axe was severely wounded, and he was the only one of the band that was injured. It was uncertain whether he would live or die. But according to their custom, before proceeding on their march with their prisoners they cast lots to see who should be doomed to die in case the wounded Indian should not recover. Their law was to offer up the life of an enemy for a life taken, as a sacrifice to the spirit of the Indian, and so have their revenge.

They cast lots and it fell upon Isaac, the younger brother of Francis Choate. His clothing was taken off and put upon the wounded Indian, and the clothes of the Indian, covered with blood, were put upon him. Before leaving, the Indians fired the block-house and cabins, burning up the bodies of the slain. Then the long dreary march to the northwest corner of Ohio commenced.

Isaac Choate, the doomed man, was compelled to walk between two of the Indian warriors, some ways behind, but sometimes in sight of the rest of the company. The wounded Indian was carried, carefully nursed, and finally recovered, so that the life of Israel Choate was spared, but he remained a captive. Thus they journeyed, and after a wearisome march they reached the British Rapids on the Maumee River, where the lad, Philip Stacey, died.

It is stated as a fact of history that at this place Colonel McKee, the Indian agent, redeemed Francis Choate for about seventy dollars, he taking special interest in his case, as Francis Choate was a brother Mason. Soon after he was sent to Detroit, from thence to Niagara on board a sloop, and from there he travelled to his home in Leicester, Mass.

Isaac Choate was taken to Detroit by the Indians, and he persuaded a humane citizen, who traded with the Indians, to advance the ransom money demanded, promising to remain in Detroit until he earned the amount, which he did in the course of a few months, and having refunded the money to his benefactor he returned down the lake and so back to his home. Colonel Brandt afterward redeemed Thomas Shaw, while James Patton was retained in an Indian family until peace was declared in 1795, when he was released.

The names of those who were killed in this massacre, as given, were: John Stacey, Ezra Putnam, John Camp, Zebulon Thorp, Jonathan Farwell, James Couch, William James, John Clark, Isaac Meeks, his wife and two children, twelve in all besides the young lad Stacey, who died on the way. The prisoners were all loaded heavily with the plunder on their tedious march, and it is said that their sufferings and injuries were so great that Francis and Isaac Choate never recovered from them so as to have good health. There is a traditional version of this captivity still narrated by the descendants of Isaac Choate.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE, as well as his father, served in the Army of the Revolution.

Vid. Massachusetts Rolls of the Revolution.

A few years after the war closed he and his brother Francis Choate joined a company of pioneers for the settlement of a fertile tract of country in the State of Ohio, which was then the "Far West." A most thrilling story of adventure and suffering, as told by his granddaughter, is something as follows:—

Isaac Choate, while resident and doing business in Hartford, Conn., by the dishonesty of his partner, became a bankrupt. Thereupon, with his brother Francis, he joined a company which was formed to settle a new country in Southern Ohio. Accordingly, leaving his family with friends, he proceeded with the others westward. When they arrived in the place where they were to locate they at once set about making the necessary arrangements for protection against the Indians, and also clearing the land for planting the next spring. They had not been at work long when they were suddenly surprised by the Indians, overcome, and all massacred excepting the Choates and a lad seventeen years old. The boy was spared by clinging to the chief and piteously beseeching him to save his life. He was prepossessing in person, and his youth and beauty captivated the Indian chief, so that he spared the lad's life.

Isaac Choate the savages tied to a tree and piled fagots about him for burning; but in some way he got loose from the fastenings. They caught him, however, and, stripped of his clothing, they made him run the gauntlet between two rows of Indians, each Indian being armed with a stick and giving him a heavy blow as he passed. He stumbled down twice, but regained his feet, and at last reached the end of the line, where he fell, completely exhausted. The Indians nursed him back to life and tied him again to the tree to be burned; and this time, before they were ready to carry out their horrible purposes, they became alarmed by the near approach of troops, so they released their captive from the tree, and tying his hands behind him compelled him to march along with them in great haste through the wilderness. They were reduced in their progress to great want, so that for days a few grains of corn for each one was all they had to eat.

The Indians went through the Sandusky country to Detroit, where they sold Mr. Choate to a white man, who gave him clothing and set him at liberty. Thereupon he started to make his way, as best he could, back to his family, who meantime had heard of the massacre of the colony, and that all had been killed.

As it happened, after a wearisome journey, on reaching the town where his family were, he overtook his wife and little boy on their way home from a neighbor's house. The meeting was very unexpected and exciting, as the wife had supposed her husband was dead. The little boy not recognizing, in the stranger, his father, became very indignant at him, and ordered him to "let his mother alone."

His health was much broken by the hardships and suffering he had endured.

After several years he removed with his family to Milan, Ohio, where a son had settled, and there remained till his death. He liked the Ohio country, but cherished great aversion to the Indians as long as he lived, so much so that he could not bear the sight of one. If an Indian made his appearance at the house he would peremptorily order him to leave, saying, with a stamp of his foot, "The red devil cannot be trusted."

In one version of this affair it is said that after running the gauntlet and being almost killed, Isaac Choate was traded off to a Scotchman by the name of McDonald, who took him to Detroit. They then sent out pioneers to find Francis Choate, for whom they were obliged to pay a ransom of two hundred dollars. Then the two brothers found their way back to New England as best they could, having suffered terrible hardships.

Isaac Choate appears in the list of claimants for compensation, reimbursements, etc., in 1802.

Mr. and Mrs. Crane resided in Jefferson County, N. Y. They had a large family of children.

Sarah Choate, daughter of Mr. Choate, was born in Bennington, Vt. She died in Milan, Ohio.

Charles Choate, the youngest son, was unmarried. He resided in Fremont, Ohio. He made money in the woollen and cloth business, retired and made investments in lands in Iowa. He was a very fine man of kind and lovable disposition. He lived to the age of eighty-six years. In Fremont Cemetery stands a beautiful Scotch marble monument, which marks the spot of his burial. His motto was: "If one wishes anything well done, he must do it himself."

Clarissa Choate, his youngest daughter, was born in Dorset, Vt. She died in Carthage, N. Y.

Dr. Robert Craig, Mrs. Choate's father, studied medicine with Dr. Thomas Green, whose daughter, Martha, he married in 1753. They lived in the south part of Leicester, Mass. He gave up the practice of his profession and became a manufacturer of spinning wheels. On account of deafness he was accustomed to sit in the pulpit on Sundays. He died in 1805 at the age of seventy-five years. Amos Craig lived on the old place. Nathan Craig, who married Sarah Choate [259], was a son of Dr. Robert Craig. *Vid. When released he made his way on board of some ship bound for Boston, Mass. On his arrival a gentleman was struck by his youthful appearance and his ragged condition, and asked him his name. "Tom Choate," the lad replied. "Any relation to my old friend, Ebenezer Choate, of Newburyport?" asked the gentleman. "Yes, sir," answered Thomas. "He is my father." "Then come with me," said the stranger. The gentleman then took him to a tailor's shop and asked him "what sort of a suit of clothes he wanted." The boy, true to the instincts of the sailor, which afterward made him the noble commander of a ship, that he was, replied, "The suit of a sailor boy." Later on he reached Newburyport after a long absence of hardship, cruelty, and want, having found very timely assistance through the good old name of Choate, which he bore.

Memoranda.

MR. LITCH was something of a military character. Mrs. Litch, at the age of ninety-three years, says of him: "My husband was as fine looking an officer as ever commanded the Fitchburg Company." The old lady continues, "I used to do up his ruffled shirt bosoms just as nice as I could, and I never saw as handsome a ruffie in the training field as he used to wear. Well, he has been dead forty-three years this month (Jan., 1878), and God has never told me to get married again. We had eleven children, four boys and seven girls. These were, all my children, born on the Freeman Place, in Lunenburg, after we moved there. I have lived here where I am now about fifty years, and I was meditating.—I was thinking I had heard say that every generation grows wiser and wiser; but I don't see what in, unless it is in servin' the devil."

Mrs. Litch was a young girl of twelve years when her father moved with his family to Lunenburg. They were a full week on the journey from Ipswich, Mass. She was married, and settled on what was called "The Arnold Place," near the boundary line on the road from Fitchburg to Lunenburg, Mass. She lived to be the oldest person in Fitchburg. One who visited her in 1878, when ninety-three years of age, writes as follows:—

"As we rose to bid the old lady good-by, she asked us if we knew how to pray. We would advise sinners to learn to pray before calling upon her. She will give a specimen of her singing to everybody. If there is a clergyman within fifty miles who wants to hear as sublime a prayer as ever fell from mortal lips we say without hesitation, go and call on Aunt Dolly Litch. She asserted that God sent friends to call upon her and cheer her, with an earnestness that was touching; and she tells of her trust in him, with a sincerity that moves. She refuses to have any one live with her to take care of her, saying, 'God takes care of me. He has done it ninety-three years. What do I want more?'"

"In answer to the urgent solicitation of her children to come and live with them she says firmly, 'No, indeed! I am not going to trouble any one when I can do my own work.' Though her form is bowed with years and her lips quiver in conversation she casts a keen, unwavering look that convinces one that she possesses strong resolution and determined purpose, as well as depth of intellectuality. She has made, from childhood, a careful study of the Bible, and can correctly repeat a large portion of both the Old and New Testaments.

"As a remarkable specimen she is worthy the study of theologians of whatever school, and no teacher of religious truth can be in her presence fifteen minutes without finding in her a compendium of Biblical knowledge as surprising as it is complete."

Vid. The Fitchburg Daily Sentinel of Feb. 4, 1878.

Mrs. Litch's children, some of them, were located as follows: Mr. and Mrs. Ebenezer C. Litch resided in Ashburnham, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Pond, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred White, and Mr. and Mrs. Alonzo P. Williams resided in Fitchburg, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. William C. Damon resided in Holden, Mass.; Mr. and Mrs. Lovell T. Richardson resided in Auburn, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Flint resided in San Francisco, Cal., and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Litch resided in Westminister, Mass.

Capt. John Litch, Mr. Litch's father, planted on the memorable "Dark Day," May 19, 1780, when it was so dark that people could not see to read at noon-day, and many persons supposed that the Day of Judgment had come, two elm-trees in front of the residence once occupied by Stephen Marsh in Lunenburg, which stood until broken down by the ice storm of Jan. 6, 1889, a period of nearly one hundred and nine years. The elevated position of these trees made them a conspicuous landmark for full three generations.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE, when a child of three years of age, was taken by his parents, in the spring of 1800, to Bridgton, Me. All his earlier impressions were of a home upon the frontiers. He had almost no advantages of schools. Being the oldest boy in a large family, he early took his part in contributing to their support. When fourteen years old, he was apprenticed to Benjamin Radford, a cabinet maker in Portland. Shop life proved distasteful, and he soon returned to the farm and to lumbering. He was all his life an out-of-door man. When about twenty years of age, he worked two years on the farm of his uncle, John P. Choate, of Essex. Later, he managed for some years the farm of Isaac Bassett, at Lynn. It was here that he married Eliza Barker, who was also from Bridgton. The young couple evidently preferred the independence of a home in Maine. A partially cleared lot of land in South Otisfield, now Naples, was bought, and on this they made their home. The record of the births and the deaths in their family shows how full of hopes and of cares the many years of their wedded life were filled. Following, apparently, the calling of his boyhood's choice, this member of the family devoted the active years of his life to the farm and to the forest with a not unsatisfactory degree of success. He studiously avoided public affairs, but was always warmly alive to the interests of the community around him. His wife was no less kindly sympathetic with those in poverty or suffering.

Mr. Choate was known for his firm adhesion to principle. He was bred to habits of frugal, temperate living, and he early espoused the cause of total abstinence. As early as 1844 he notified the men who applied to him for employment that he should furnish no liquors to his help, not even in haying-time, nor should he permit the use of liquors on his premises, even if the men provided it for themselves. He was at first promptly told that his grass would stand uncut till it dried in the field. "Then," was the laconic and firm rejoinder, "it will burn without difficulty."

For about a year, during the War of the Union, he was left alone in the management of his farm by the absence of his elder son in the army, and the younger engaged in teaching. He was then advanced in years and his health poor. He needed help and was known to be anxious to employ it. A draft was held in the town for a small number of men. The quota was subsequently filled so that none of the drafted men were required to serve. One of the number, however, who had received from the examining surgeon a certificate of disability, and who had expressed unpatriotic sentiments, offered his services to Mr. Choate as a farm hand. He was questioned with regard to the matter of the draft, but explained it all by quoting the opinion of the surgeon. "All the work on my farm," said Mr. Choate, "which is not more burdensome than military duties, I can do without help. It is plain the remainder of the work is too heavy for you, and that you can be of no service to me."

Memoranda.

MR. NEHEMIAH CHOATE, the second son of Ebenezer Choate, took his part in the work of supporting the numerous family into which he was born. He must have been a youth of unusual strength and vigor, for although he was known as a hard-working man among the hard-working people with whom he lived, the writer of this has heard him say that he never knew what it was to feel tired until he was upwards of sixty years of age. He worked as a farm hand summers, and spent the winters in the logging swamp. Every spring he was upon the ponds and rivers driving logs. There was no form of hardship, privation and exposure in the wilderness with which he was not perfectly familiar, and which he did not seem to find on the whole rather enjoyable. When he settled in life he bought a lot of land adjoining his father's, and made a farm now occupied by Charles Choate [666]. The farm embraces a hill, the highest in Bridgton, known as "Choate Hill." On this farm Nehemiah Choate lived until after the death of his wife. Later, he spent one year with his sons in Oshkosh, Wis. Upon the marriage of his daughter, he went to live with her upon the farm which had belonged to his brother Ebenezer, at Naples, and this was his home for the rest of his life. He retained to the time of his death, at a great age, full possession of his faculties, and kept his habitually cheerful outlook upon the world about him.

Mr. Choate was the last survivor of the original, or charter members, of the South Parish in Bridgton, Me. He was also a member of the Congregational Church of that Parish for many years. He died in his ninetieth year, a venerable and much respected citizen.

Jacob Barker Choate, Mr. Choate's third son, entered the Union Army and died early in the war, from wounds which he received in battle.

MR. CHOATE left home early in life, and was soon employed by Mr. Byam, of Charlestown, Mass., in the manufacture of lucifer matches. It was at the beginning of that industry, and the poisonous character of phosphorus was not then known. In the course of a few years a peculiarly painful disease manifested itself in the lower jaw and in the bones of the face. It was the first case of the kind that came to the knowledge of the medical faculty, and they had no theory as to the cause of the disease or the treatment to be given it. Mr. Choate died at the Massachusetts General Hospital after having suffered all that a strong and vigorous constitution could endure.

Memoranda.

ALDEN CHOATE, being one of the younger sons of a large family, was made to contribute to the support of the household, in the only way he could possibly help as a child, by "going out to live," as it was called in those days. He was for five years, from the age of nine to fourteen, in the family of William Barker of Bridgton, the father of Eliza Barker, who afterwards married his oldest brother, Ebenezer. He is probably the only person now living who retains a recollection of this woman in her girlhood. After leaving this home with the Barkers, Alden Choate worked at home and as a farm-hand among the neighbors for a year or two, and then for one year he entered the employ of Luther Fitch, a lumberman, of Baldwin, Me. His next move was to Lynn, where his brother Ebenezer was living. He obtained employment, first with Isaac Bassett, and afterwards with Micajah Pratt, in the making of shoes. Having learned this trade, he followed it for several years until failing health obliged him to seek other business. He now established a wood, coal, and lumber business in Lynn, which he continued for several years. About 1856 he sold out this business and removed to Oshkosh, Wis., where for a number of years he engaged successfully in lumbering. He made extensive purchases on the Wolf, the Wisconsin, and the Chippeway. His operations were conducted with enterprise and business sagacity. He here laid the foundation of a respectable fortune. No doubt the training of his early life stood him in good stead among the pineries of Wisconsin. While living at Oshkosh he was a member of the Board of Aldermen, and was otherwise prominently identified with the interests of the growing city. About 1867 Mr. Choate returned to Lynn and repurchased his old wharf. He still continued for some years his business relations with Wisconsin. These were gradually closed, and with the growing infirmities of years he was forced to withdraw from active life. He is now living at Lynn with his wife, and with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Goldsmith, the only survivor of his generation, and one of the few living sons of the American Revolution.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE was the youngest of the boys of the old Revolutionary soldier, Ebenezer Choate, of Bridgton, Me., and often in his boyhood had he listened with eager attention to the recitals of army experiences and Revolutionary scenes through which his father had passed. For Ebenezer Choate, at the age of fifteen years, fired by the spirit of patriotism, had enlisted in the army to join his regiment at White Plains, and after a weary march arrived in camp only to find that his older brother, Nehemiah Choate, had died the week before of small-pox in the hospital. Then followed three years of service with all its hardships of march and picket duty, with its suffering, its destitution of food and clothing, its experiences and alarms, but with its instruction and discipline also. For this young soldier in later life would tell of his management to obtain, while in camp, lessons in writing, arithmetic, and keeping accounts. How he exchanged his rations of whiskey for so many hours of teaching with a soldier who was only too fond of double rations along that line. How when in the long night on picket duty he challenged the approach through the bushes of some supposed hostile intruder, and receiving no answer he fired, with deadly effect, and the next morning discovered that he had shot not a red-coated British soldier, but only a cow!

The three years of incident and camp life, and marching and cold and destitution, at length were ended. The war closed and the boy soldier was mustered out in the spring of 1782. His receipt for pay being dated May 10, 1782, may be found at the State House.

It may be stated here that Mr. Choate's father, Ebenezer Choate, of Bridgton, Me., was one of the one hundred and seven survivors of the Revolution who were present at the dedication of the Bunker Hill Monument. He was then seventy-eight years old, but there were in the ranks only two men who were younger.

It somehow fell to Leander Choate, the youngest of the boys of this old soldier, partly, perhaps, because he was the youngest, and partly, also, it may be, because he was less robust than his brothers, it fell to his lot, to remain upon the homestead, the stay of his parents in their declining years. This farm, which was first occupied by Ebenezer Choate in the year 1800, remained the home of Leander until failing health compelled him to sell it, and to remove to a home in the village. The old homestead passed into other hands, and in the course of a few years the house and all the buildings except the barns, were burned to the ground. They have not been rebuilt, and the place is now marked most conspicuously by its noble elms, which were planted by the older children of Ebenezer and Elizabeth Choate, and immortalized by their grand-son in verse:—

ANCESTRAL TREES.

Firm-rooted, sending far and wide
Their mooring lines on every side.

These sturdy elm-trees stand;
Uplifting branches, waving high,
Told out against the evening sky
With buttressed columns grand.

Low-whispered tones the passing breeze
Sends through the foliage of the trees
In summer soft and bland;

The boughs are tossed with easy grace
As flaxen locks round child-like face
By breath of morning fanned.

But when these branches, stripped and bare,
Hard stiffened in the frosty air
As if in metal cast,

Hang loaded down with ice and snow,
Loud creaking, they swing to and fro
Driven by the wintry blast.

Alone these stand, of all the last,
Above the spot where in the past
A broad-roofed farm-house stood;

Along the lane, ranged side by side,
Their branches reaching far and wide,
A noble brotherhood.

Beneath this deep and ample shade
I have troops of happy children played,
Careless, without annoy.

Few now are left whose memory chimes
With laughter of those merry times
When living was a joy.

By few eyes would this path be traced
Along which, grave and thoughtful, paced
That venerable one

Who served in youth his country well,
Whose eyes had known that magic spell,
The eyes of Washington.

Live long, ye elms, whose arches fair
Remind us of the prudent care

That set you in this place;
Remind us to our latest years
Of ancestors who were your peers
In dignity and grace.

Memoranda.

MR. COGSWELL was a well-known and substantial citizen of Henniker, N. H. He was Captain of Militia and lived to the great age of ninety-two years.

Mrs. Choate was a loving and devoted wife and mother, a valued and much-esteemed neighbor and friend. She was an humble and consistent member of the Congregational Church, of which she was a member fifty-five years. The faith she professed became an abiding trust in the Lord Jesus, which never faltered amid the severest trials, and which held her as an anchor to Him, when consciously passing through the dark valley and shadow of death. "The familiar hymn, "He Leadeth Me," suggested many comforting thoughts, and was often on her lips in health, thus:—

"— But when the storms beat loudest, and I cry Aloud for help, the Master standeth by,
And whispers to my soul, 'Lo, it is I.'"

And, when far down the valley, by her own request, the fifteenth chapter of John was read to her, it seemed to stay her soul "in perfect peace." Among her last words were, "Blessed Jesus! What could I do without Him now!"

MR. MORSE was a merchant in Manchester, N. H. Mr. Wilkins was a wheelwright and trader. He was, for ten years, postmaster of Henniker, N. H. He died February, 1883.

MR. CHOATE spent his early boyhood in the public schools of his native town, Charlestown, Mass. When ten years of age he went to Petersham and lived in the family of an uncle, under whose care he remained for nearly two years. He then went to Lynn, where for seven or eight years he was employed in the shoe business. At twenty years of age, with a desire for a better education than his opportunities had afforded, he became a student for a year or two in the academy in Hampton, N. H.

His studies were selected with some reference to a business career. On leaving the academy he became a clerk in a general country store, in Exeter, N. H., of which his older brother, William T. Choate [340], was the proprietor. This was an admirable training for his subsequent business life. Later he settled in Woburn, Mass., where he soon commenced the shoe manufacturing business for himself, which he carried on successfully until, in 1844, he removed to Boston, where he extended his manufactures in the same line. In 1848 he retired from active business, but in 1852 resumed it under the firm name of Alley, Choate & Cummings, having manufacturing establishments in Woburn, Mass., and in Lowell, Me. In 1864 the firm was dissolved and Mr. Choate retired.

Although a busy man he always took a reasonable interest in political affairs, and served, more or less, the public in official positions. He was a State Senator three years, in 1845, 1846, and in 1849. He was placed on some important committees, where he served with great efficiency. He was on the staff of Governor Briggs, and hence his military title of Colonel. He held many local offices of trust and honor. He was a director of the Shoe and Leather Insurance Company in Boston.

Mr. Choate was a member of the Unitarian Church in Woburn, and for many years identified with its work in promoting the moral and religious welfare of the community.

Colonel Choate was a man of very commanding presence, being over six feet in height, and well proportioned. He was very genial and interesting in conversation, and universally respected.

Memoranda.

CYRUS CHOATE was a lad of but thirteen years when his father, Rev. Stephen Choate, died. The only inheritance left the family was a small farm on the hills of Wardsboro', Vt. Cyrus, being the oldest, became his mother's principal helper in providing for her family of six small children. Mrs. Choate managed well, and when her son Cyrus was married his house became the home of the whole family.

Mr. Choate, in 1830, took the contract for constructing a turnpike road over the mountain from Stratton to Arlington, Vt. This undertaking occupied three years in its accomplishment.

He became in early life a member of the Church over which his father had been Pastor, and was chosen Deacon, in which office he served for several years. Deacon Choate and all his family were active workers in the cause of temperance and strongly anti-slavery in their sentiment.

In 1834, in company with four or five townsmen, he journeyed to what was then the far West, prospecting for land upon which to settle and make homes for their children. They finally located in the northeastern part of Indiana. Deacon Choate, with his family, his mother, a sister and her husband, in the spring of 1836 removed in their own conveyances to this distant place. It was a journey of weeks and many hardships, but at last accomplished.

This little colony from Vermont were delighted to establish New England institutions and customs in this new country. They very soon provided church privileges, established public schools, and the place became known as "The Vermont Settlement." But on the establishment of a post-office the place was called Orland. It was a station on the underground railroad in the days when slaves left their masters for homes in Canada.

Deacon Choate was a Justice of the Peace in Orland as long as he lived. He was a man much respected, and his death, at the early age of forty-two years, was deeply lamented.

Memoiranda.

MR. CHOATE, in 1796, made his way through an almost unbroken wilderness to Canada. He became an officer in the Canadian Army in the War of 1812, and in the course of his life accumulated a substantial property. The following is —

A NARRATIVE OF THE CHOATES.

Given by Zaccheus Burnham Choate, of Hamilton, Ontario.

THE CHOATE FAMILY were Huguenots, who fled from France in 1572, the year of the St. Bartholomew Massacre, and settled in England, where the city of Liverpool now stands. From that place came John Choate with a brother, in 1645, to Chebacco, Ipswich, Mass. The brother returned the following year, 1646.

After the revocation of the edict of Nantes more of the Choates left France and settled in some of the midland counties of England; of these the writer has no knowledge, save that he once had a communication from some official in that neighborhood, making inquiry for the next of kin to Sir Joseph Choate, who, it appears, died without heirs.

My great-grandfather, Thomas Choate [81], born in Chebacco (now Essex), Mass., Oct. 11, 1718, resided for a time on "Hog Island," but removed to "Choate's Hill," Boscawen, N. H., where he lived the remainder of his days.

Lieut. Thomas Choate's oldest son, Jacob Choate [186], my grandfather, born Oct. 11, 1746, followed the seas for some years, but having lost his vessel, he left the seas and went to farming. In 1785 Jacob Choate removed to New Hampshire and settled in the town of Enfield, N. H. At that time my father was twelve years old.

In 1796 my father, Thomas Choate [375], had become dissatisfied with the laws of the country in which he lived, his father, by some trickery, having been robbed of all he owned, concluded to go to Canada. Accordingly he made his way through Vermont and New York States, then an almost unbroken wilderness, to Niagara. He found the laws of Canada much more to his liking, and determined to make that country his home. Going westward some fifty miles from Niagara, he selected a location for his settlement. This place afterward became Glamford, in the County of Wentworth. In 1797 he cleared a few acres of land and planted it with corn and potatoes. His nearest neighbor to the north was four miles away, and to the south, twelve miles distant.

After hoeing his ground, and seeing his corn and potatoes in a fine growing condition, he returned on foot to Enfield, N. H., to arrange some business for his father, and then walked back to Canada in time to harvest his crops, which were quite good. He then returned on foot again to New Hampshire.

Early in the spring of 1798, Thomas Choate and his three brothers, Jacob, James, and Nathan Choate, with two cousins of the name of Burnham, started for Canada, taking with them a yoke of oxen, which were driven singly because the Indian foot-path was narrow. These oxen were loaded on their backs with tools, provisions for the journey, etc.

On reaching the Mohawk River they undertook to replenish their stock of food for the rest of the way. On going into a house they found the people all sick and as it proved with the small-pox. Having thus been exposed they concluded to stay where they were until it was all over. To hasten the matter they hired a shanty and inoculated themselves with the small-pox virus. Having recovered, and smoked their clothing, they went on their way. And on arriving at the location they at once went to work to carve out homes for themselves. Taking advantage of the free grant of one hundred acres of land secured to each actual settler, they added to this as rapidly as possible by purchase.

My uncles, Jacob, James, and Nathan Choate, did not remain long near where my father settled. But my uncle, Jacob Choate, settled near where the town of Port Hope now is, on the north shore of Lake Ontario. My uncles, James and Nathan Choate, went to the westward some sixty miles, near where the city of London now is.

My grandfather, Jacob Choate, came into this country in 1800. He came through on horseback, there being no roads over which a wagon could pass. He spent a part of his time with my uncles, James and Nathan Choate, in the county of Oxford, but died in 1828, at my father's house.

Thomas Choate, who settled in Canada, soon carved out for himself a home in the wilderness, and became a successful agriculturist. He was among the first to engage in butter and cheese making in upper Canada. He was much interested in his cattle and horses, and in improved stock.

During the War of 1812 he served as a soldier, being attached to the Forty-ninth Regiment of British Regulars. He fought at Queenstown, and in other engagements. He rose to the rank of a captain, and commanded a company during the troubles in Canada in 1837-38.

Mrs. Choate was descended from Loyalists in the time of the Revolution. Her grandfather was a Mr. Laud, who lived somewhere on the Susquehanna River, and was supposed to have been killed early in the war, but made his escape, and reached a British military post on the Niagara, and from there made his way to the head of Lake Ontario, and was the first white man to settle in the place where the city of Hamilton now stands. Mr. Laud's wife was Margaret Scott, of Virginia, and an aunt of Colonel, afterward General, Winfield Scott, U. S. A.

At the close of the Revolution she, Mrs. Margaret (Scott) Laud, with her family, removed to New Brunswick, where her daughter was married, and her granddaughter, Anna McCarter, was born in 1789. About this time the old lady, Mrs. Laud, heard that a man by the name of Laud was living alone in Canada, at the head of Lake Ontario, whom she believed was her husband, although all others believed her husband to be dead. It transpired that he had believed that his family were all killed at the time of his escape, as he had returned some nights after the fighting and found his house with its contents all burned and his family gone; so he made his escape to Canada, while his family had removed to the State of New York.

Mrs. Laud, determined to find out who this Mr. Laud might be, despatched one of her sons in search of the person of whom she had heard. On reaching the place the old lady's suspicions were verified: the man was indeed her husband. The son returned to New Brunswick and brought the rest of the family to Hamilton, Canada.

Memoranda.

THERE is some uncertainty in regard to the above record of this family. It has been said that Mr. Choate was married but once, and that he and Mrs. Elizabeth Choate died on the same day only a few hours apart. It appears from the above record that Mrs. Choate died a few days after her husband, and on the same day with the son, Jacob Choate [765]. All attempts for confirmed data proved in vain.

HON. ZACCHEUS BURNHAM was a man of great distinction, known as "Judge Burnham." Thomas Choate [756] writes:—

"Mr. and Mrs. Z. Burnham settled in the woods of Canada, near where Cobourg now is, about the year 1800, and by honorable industry and perseverance soon made themselves and children a very comfortable home. Mr. Burnham was one of the most enterprising farmers in the Province of Upper Canada, was early appointed a Justice of the Peace, and elected a Member of Parliament, held and acquitted himself well in various offices until his death, accumulated and left to his heirs a large amount of property. He was also a Senator many years."

Hon. Zaccheus Burnham's father was a brother to Hannah Burnham, who married Jacob Choate [185], so that he was an own cousin to the three sons of Jacob Choate, who settled in Canada.

Lieut. Nathan Burnham, who was shot July 8, 1758, and died of his wounds the next day, July 9, 1758, was Judge Burnham's grandfather, and the lamented husband of Mrs. Hannah [62] (Choate) Burnham, who died March 1, 1805, in Dunbarton, N. H.

Hon. Zaccheus Burnham was a man of great prominence and large wealth. He was for many years a member of the Canadian Parliament, also a member of the County Legislative Council and Treasurer of the County for a long period. ## Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE possessed uncommon natural ability, a strong thirst for knowledge, and was an untiring student, often spending the entire night, after the labors of the day were done, in study, investigation, and writing, and could he have had the advantages of a collegiate education, which he so much desired, would have become very eminent for his learning, and yet by means of these qualities he, in great measure, supplied the want of the advantages of the higher schools, and by his own exertions, almost unaided mastered the common and many of the higher branches of an English education, including surveying, which he practised during his subsequent residence in New England. He had a more familiar and practical acquaintance with the intricate and irregular surveys of the section of country where he lived than any other person at that time. He taught school during the winters for several years, alternating in summer, between surveying and the farm.

He was a consistent and devoted Christian, and early identified himself with the Congregational Church of his native town, of which he was one of the founders, and its clerk during his entire subsequent residence there. He, with a few others of his father's family, furnished the means to build and pay for one half of the large and commodious church edifice in which they worshipped; he was also a generous contributor to the minister and other church expenses, and to all charitable and benevolent objects. Being desirous of giving his children better advantages for an education than he himself had enjoyed, he sent them to Kimball Union Academy, at Meriden, N. H., and in 1855 removed there, remaining long enough for them to complete their course of studies, when he returned to the farm in Enfield. He was for many years a Justice of the Peace, and also one of the Selectmen of the town, but his naturally modest and retiring disposition and disinclination for public life, prevented his ever seeking any position to which his merit would have entitled him.

In 1862 he moved to Tiskilwa, Ill., to which place most of his children had preceded him; here his wife died, a talented, beautiful, and conscientious woman of good education, who had been an invalid for a long time. She was buried in Providence, Ill. Mr. Choate, with his two daughters, in 1863, removed to Valparaiso, Ind., where he died, at the age of eighty-five, full of years and of trust in the God of his fathers.

Mr. Choate's daughters were educated in the public schools of their native town and in Kimball Union Academy, Meriden, N. H. The three younger ones became teachers.

Mehitable Plummer Choate died in the midst of her usefulness. She was a fine scholar, successful teacher, and a devoted Christian.

Hannah Augusta Choate graduated in the class of 1858 from Kimball Union Academy, taught public schools in New England, and later in Illinois and Indiana. She died in Valparaiso, Ind.

Sophia J. Currier Choate was for three years a student in Kimball Union Academy, 1855-58. She taught school for some time, and later made her home in Valparaiso, Ind.

MR. CHOATE was named for his grandfather, Thomas Choate [81] from whom he inherited some "silver shoe buckles," which were afterward exchanged for a large silver spoon. Mr. Choate was a very earnest Christian. Learning devotional hymns and religious truths from his mother's lips in childhood, and accustomed to walk six miles to Springfield to meeting, he became a follower of Christ so early that he could not remember the time when he did not find enjoyment in prayer. One of the first members of the always small Congregational Church in Enfield, N. H., he gave his earnest support to it, and was ever constant in attendance upon religious ordinances. Upright, consistent, honest, conscientious, and of excellent judgment, he gained the respect of all. He was quiet, sensitive, unobtrusive, and faithful in all the relations of life, but it was in the home where his character shone in all its excellence.

Mrs. Choate was naturally more sunny in temperament, but of a like spirit and Christian character. They were one in their aims and in their efforts; their life was harmonious, and their children honor and revere their memory.

Mary Loomis Choate, the oldest daughter, who passed out of life here, Jan. 22, 1892, into the heavenly life, was much beloved and universally lamented. The local paper, a few days later, speaks of her as follows:—

"One week ago last Sabbath day, with simple but touching services conducted by her pastor of the Congregational Church, was laid to rest the form of a royal-hearted Christian woman. Not by robe and crown was the royalty of her nature manifest, nor by sceptre of temporal power; but by the all potent sceptre of love, whose exercise in prayer and kindly ministrations among the poor and the sorrowing clothed her with beauty in their eyes, and crowned her a child of the King. Trained in some of the best of our schools for the high position of teacher, she never lost her deep interest in the welfare of the young, though feeble health kept her much from their midst, and from mingling in the busy scenes of life outside her home. Naturally she was retiring, but when duty summoned her to action, in the strength of her Saviour she answered to the call, and in his name sought to do what she could. Her loss falls especially heavy upon her sister, from whom, since the days of education in certain particular branches, she has scarcely ever been separated, and who remains the last survivor of a family of five children. But they had one faith and one Master, and the consolation of the one and the love of the other are all sufficient to hearts that mourn and are lonely. We have said to Mary L. Choate our last good-night. In the shadowless land loved ones have bidden her good-morning."

MARY L. CHOATE.

Miss Choate was a graduate from the Kimball Union Academy, Meriden, N. H. She spent six months abroad acquiring the French language, and was thoroughly equipped for teaching, which she pursued successfully until obliged, by an organic disease, to relinquish her loved occupation. She was a very fine scholar, but of a retiring disposition: a person of great amiability and universally beloved.

Memoranda.

GEORGE CHOATE was a timid boy and enjoyed the home fireside more than the evening recreations and entertainments of the village young people, and consequently was considered unsocial. His fondness for study suggested to his parents the idea of educating him for the Christian ministry, but his great timidity seemed an obstacle in the way.

He completed the course in Derry Academy, and then went to a trade. At twenty-one years of age he had completed his apprenticeship for the fuller's trade. This business was soon superseded by woollen manufactures. Mr. Choate, however, in the spring of 1828, went to Lowell and was employed in a small mill called "Hurd's Mill," which subsequently expanded into the "Middlesex Corporation." For thirty-nine years he labored faithfully, and was advanced step by step until he became master of the finishing department.

Mr. Choate served the city two years, 1844 and 1845, in the Common Council from Ward Three. He was an active member of the John Street Congregational Church, and was a man universally respected and esteemed for his sterling integrity and Christian principles. He was a gentleman of "the old school" and made the world better by living in it.

Mrs. Lucy A. Choate was of a literary turn of mind. She contributed various articles of interest to the Lowell Offering, and other local publications.

Little Emily, who died in childhood, came as a transient sunbeam into the home to gild it for a moment and then pass away into heaven, where "Their angels do always behold the face of their Father."

Miss Susan E. Choate graduated, in 1880, from the High School and resides in Lowell, Mass.

James Addison Choate, the oldest son, was an invalid from his infancy, but his ill health seemed to develop in him a remarkable patience which beautified his life. He was fond of books, and had a great passion for music. His attachment and devotion to his father were equalled only by his father's fondness for him. They were companions, and their mutual attachments were like those of David and Jonathan. "They were lovely in their lives," and death did not long separate them. The father survived the son but a few months.

George Washington Choate, the second son, a young man of noble Christian character and of unusual promise, was drowned at the age of nineteen years. The accident occurred on a Thursday afternoon, June 16, 1870, off Ipswich lighthouse. Young Choate and four others about his age were spending a few days of recreation on the coast, making their headquarters on Grape Island. As three of the young men were out pleasuring in the boat, for some reason it sunk under them at a distance of a half a mile from the shore. They were all good swimmers, but the tide was going out, and it appears that when he had swam about half of the distance young Choate, in the attempt to divest himself of his clothing, lost the free use of his limbs, and was drowned. His companions, after an hour's struggle with the waves, reached the shore, not aware of the sad fate of Choate, who, in response to their call a little before as to how he was getting along, had said, "All right."

A local paper characterizes the accident "as one of the saddest that has been recorded here for many years, and the loss of this young man, so loved and respected, is a source of deep sorrow to many friends, as well as of unutterable anguish to his parents and relatives."

The stricken mother tried to comfort her broken heart by saying, "For nineteen beautiful years we had him with us."

CHOATE BURNHAM, the only son who lived to manhood, was educated in the public schools of his native town, and with his father, while a young man, engaged in ship building. He went in 1842 to South Boston, Mass.; was married in the autumn of that year, and plied the trade of a carpenter for several years. He then engaged in the real estate business, and later became a large dealer in wood and coal. He was a very successful business man.

His home was in South Boston with the exception of ten years, from 1846 to 1856, which he spent in Hamilton, Mass. While resident there he was elected to the House of Representatives. He was a member of the Board of Aldermen of the city of Boston in 1876-77, and served at various times on the School Committee for more than twenty-five years. Mr. Burnham was a delegate to the Republican Convention in Chicago which nominated Garfield and Arthur for President and Vice-President of the United States. He was one of the incorporators of the South Boston Savings Bank, of which he was also a trustee, connected with the Howard Benevolent Society, and identified with all the benevolent and local institutions of the city where he lived.

Mr. Burnham was active in all Christian efforts. He united with the Phillips Congregational Church on first going to South Boston, and during his entire residence there was actively identified with all her interests. He was chosen a deacon in 1859, and at the time of his death was the senior deacon of the church. For a period of fourteen years, 1858-72, he was a most efficient Superintendent of the Sunday School.

Deacon Burnham, at the time of his decease, was a member of the Executive Committee of the Congregational Club, the Senior Trustee of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and Treasurer of the Golden Rule Company. His interest in the Christian Endeavor movement was most enthusiastic. To his hearty co-operation Dr. Clark owed much for the sudden and large success of this new departure in Christian work. He was a wise and able officer of the church and was greatly beloved by both the old and the young. The Phillips Church sustained a great loss in his death, and his memory will long continue an abiding treasure and inspiration.

Deacon Burnham was a descendant of patriots: his ancestors on both sides were soldiers in the Revolution and in the War of 1812. In the latter his grandfather was taken prisoner by the British and confined to its close in "Mill Prison." His residence was 292 West Broadway, South Boston, Mass. His first wife died a few years after marriage, and he married her sister. They were daughters of Zachariah Stanley, Esq., of Hamilton, Mass. There were three children, viz., Eliza Matilda Stanley, b. May 4, 1845; m. Feb. 26, 1873, George W. Mills; res. Boston, Mass. Stanley Choate, b. April 2, 1848; m. Oct. 2, 1872, Isabel Gallagher; d. MR. CHOATE was a sea captain. For many years he made voyages from Salem, Mass., to the West Indies. It is said he was a most genial, cheerful, and social man. His return from a sea voyage was hailed with delight by the children of his neighborhood, for he brought to them tropical fruits and presents from remote places. He gave interesting descriptions of the Islands and of the natives. He told marvellous stories of the sea. And says one, still living, who was among the children of the next house, that welcomed the return of Captain Choate sixty years ago. "For us his presence always had a romantic charm."

In "An account of the Armed Vessels, privateers belonging to Salem, Mass., during the War of 1812," Capt. Harvey Choate appears as the commander of the schooner, "Swift," which was manned by a crew of twenty-five men.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE was educated in Harvard College. He belonged to the famous Senior Class of 1823, which was expelled for demonstrating their disapprobation of an obnoxious fellow student. The epistle of the President, explaining to young Choate's father the circumstances, and giving the reasons for the expulsion of his son, is a very formidable document, expressed in very dignified and formal language, speaking in the third person, for the Government of the university, and signed,—

"J. T. Kirkland, President, June 30."

Mr. Choate received his diploma some years later, although he had been entered and graduated, in 1823, from Bowdoin College. He taught the Ipswich Grammar School for a year, and having completed his medical studies, he settled in the practice of medicine in Boston, Mass., where he remained until 1839, when his health failed and he went West to a small town named La Harpe, Ill. Subsequently he removed to a place on the Mississippi River, about two hundred miles above St. Louis. His residence was on a bluff overlooking the great river for many miles, and from which the eye could rest upon the borders of three States, Illinois, Missouri, and Iowa. An appreciative sketch of Dr. Choate appeared in a local paper at the time of his death, which reads as follows:—

"Dr. Choate, an old and well-known citizen of Hancock County, died at his residence at Riverside, in Montebello township, on June 17, 1874.

"He was born in Ipswich, Mass., February, 1803, and was consequently in the seventy-second year of his age. He received his education in Boston, having entered college at sixteen years of age.

"Dr. Choate removed to and settled in La Harpe, in Hancock County, in 1839, where he continued to reside, engaged in the successful practice of medicine for about fifteen years, when he settled at a beautiful spot on the Mississippi Bluff, in Montebello township. Here he relinquished practice and devoted his time to the cultivation of a farm. Twelve or fifteen years ago he met with a fall which disabled him for life, so that he was compelled to resort to the use of crutches, and which rendered his later years burdensome and painful.

"Dr. Choate was a Democrat of the old school, sincere in his convictions and unwavering in his support of the party. He never sought office, which he was well qualified to fill. In 1847 he was nominated, with four others, by the anti-Mormon party as a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of Illinois. Said delegates were chosen from both political parties, and were all elected, Dr. Choate receiving not only the anti-Mormon vote, but that of the straight Democratic ticket.

"In private life Dr. Choate was respected by all who knew him. He was affable and courteous, quiet and unpretentious in his manners, a good thinker and talker, a genial companion. He leaves a widow and three children to mourn his loss, two daughters having gone before. One son resides in California, the other in Georgia; the youngest daughter is Mrs. C. B. Rockwell, of Montebello, Ill."

Mrs. Choate's father was for many years a merchant in Boston, Mass., Howard Street of that city being named for him.

Robert Howard Choate, the oldest son, has been interested in mining enterprises in California and in Arizona.

Hon. Charles Augustus Choate receives mention on a subsequent page.

HON. ELIJAH LIVERMORE HAMLIN.

MR. HAMLIN graduated, in 1818, from Brown University, read law with Governor Lincoln. He practised his profession in Waterford and Columbia until 1835, when he removed to Bangor, Me., where he resided the rest of his life.

He was, in politics, an ardent Whig, and took an active and prominent part in the affairs of the party. He was elected many times to the Legislature of Maine, both in the House and the Senate, from Washington and Penobscot counties and the city of Bangor. Also Land Agent of the State in 1838 and 1841. He was appointed, June 5, 1854, by the President, Commissioner of the United States under the Reciprocity Treaty, with Great Britain. He was the Whig candidate for Governor of Maine in 1848 and 1849, and received the full vote of the party. In 1854 he joined the Republican party, and was prominent in its councils until his death.

He had a great love for historical and scientific investigations, and contributed largely to the scientific and antiquarian collections of the country. He discovered in his student days the famous Mt. Mica at Paris, Me., which is probably one of the most remarkable deposits of minerals of the lithia group known in the world.

The tourmalines from this place are unsurpassed in beauty, value, size, and arrangement of color, some of which are indeed marvels of the mineral kingdom.

"The rare and valuable group of minerals found at Mount Mica by Elijah L. Hamlin have a reputation among mineralogists the world over. . . . The Mount Mica tourmalines are in many respects unique, as admitted by all good judges."

Vid. History of Paris, Me., pp. 85, 86.

Elijah Livermore Hamlin was an older brother of Hon. Hannibal Hamlin, Vice-President of the United States. He was regarded by his fellow-citizens with the utmost confidence in his unswerving integrity, and honored by them, at various times, with positions of great responsibility. Mr. Hamlin was a man of marked appearance and distinguished personal bearing. At one of President Lincoln's receptions in Washington it is said that he divided the honor for good looks with Secretary Chase, of Ohio.

MRS. HAMLIN, at the time of her death, was mentioned in the local papers with highly appreciatory obituary notices, and spoken of as well known and actively connected with the charitable and philanthropic institutions of the city.

Hon. George Stetson, who married Mr. Hamlin's oldest daughter, was one of the most influential and wealthy citizens of Bangor, Me. He was President of the First National Bank of that city for more than a quarter of a century. His death occurred June 15, 1891, at the age of eighty-four years. His widow and two sons survived him.

Samuel R. Carter, Esq., who married Mr. Hamlin's youngest daughter, was a son of the late Timothy J. Carter, Member of Congress. He is a lawyer of prominence in Oxford County, and resides in Paris, Me.

AUGUSTUS CHOATE HAMLIN, M. D.

AUGUSTUS CHOATE HAMLIN was born in Columbia, Me., but since 1835 Bangor has been his home. He graduated in Belles Lettres at Bowdoin College in 1851, and in Medicine at Harvard University in 1854, after passing nearly two years in observation and study in Europe.

At the outbreak of the Civil War he raised a company of infantry, but was appointed, in May, 1861, Assistant Surgeon of the Second Maine Volunteers, which was the first regiment to leave the State for the front. He participated as a volunteer with the First Massachusetts and Twelfth New York in the fight at Blackman's Ford, and with the Second Maine in the first Bull Run, and in the campaign ending with the fall of Yorktown.

In April, 1862, he was appointed Brigade Surgeon, and sent to the Army of Western Virginia, commanded by General Fremont. There he was assigned as chief of the Medical Staff of the Advance Guard, commanded by Col. Gustave P. Cluseret, a distinguished French officer, one of Garibaldi's honored lieutenants, and afterwards celebrated as the Secretary of War under the early days of the Commune, in Paris, France. With Fremont he participated in the campaign of Western Virginia, and in the pursuit of Jackson in the Shenandoah Valley, ending with the battle of Cross Keys, in which he received special mention. He then formed the well-known Flying Hospital, which took part in all the engagements of Pope's campaign, commencing with the battle of Cedar Mountain, and ending with the second Bull Run and Chantilly. After the formation of the Eleventh Corps from the wreck of the Army of Western Virginia and other organizations he was selected by General Sigel as its Medical Director, and remained with that corps until after the battle of Fredericksburg.

In February, 1863, he was appointed by the President Medical Inspector in the Regular Army, with rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, and assigned to the supervision of the great hospital system at Washington, which provided for more than twenty thousand disabled soldiers at a time.

In July, 1863, he was ordered to the supervision of the Army of the South, then operating against Charleston under the command of General Gillmore, and took part in the memorable conflicts connected with the capture of Fort Wagner, and the destruction of Fort Sumter. He was then recalled to Washington, where he remained until near the close of the year 1864, and during the terrible campaign of the Wilderness and the flank marches toward Richmond, during which period the Hospital System received and cared for nearly one hundred thousand sick and wounded soldiers. He was then assigned as Chief Medical Inspector of the Armies of the Southwest commanded by Gen. George H. Thomas, with whom he remained until the close of the war. In November, 1865, he was mustered out of service, and returned to his home somewhat broken in health, having served throughout the war and in the campaigns of McDowell, McClellan, Fremont, Sigel, Pope, Hooker, Gillmore, and Thomas.

Since the war he has occupied but little of his time in the practice of his profession, but more in scientific pursuits and studies, and has published at times many papers relating to the different subjects of his inquiry. His account of Andersonville was the first to inform the world of the heroism of our soldiers under the cruel treatment of Wirz, Winder, and others. Among his other publications on various subjects are: "The Salmo Toma, etc.," "Transfusion"; "Tetanus Alimentation, in a Rational View"; "Transmission of Diseases," etc.; "The Tourmaline Leisure Hours among the Gems."

He is a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, of which he was the General Secretary at the Hartford meeting in 1874, also a member of the Philadelphia Academy of Sciences, of the Royal Society of Antiquarians of Northern Europe, and other societies.

In 1879, for his attention and kindness to the Russian officers at Washington, 1864, and to those who came to the coast of Maine in 1878, in the steamer "Cimbria," to take charge of the cruisers constructed for them at Philadelphia, he was made by Alexander II. a Chevalier of the Imperial Order of Russia, with the honors and rights thereto attached.

In 1877 and 1878 he was twice elected Mayor of the city of Bangor. He has been interested with the Grand Army of the Republic from its formation, and has been honored with important positions in the Order. In 1879 he was chosen Commander of the Department of Maine.

He was chosen Commissioner of Maine in 1881, to represent the State in the Yorktown Centennial Celebration. He was Surgeon-General of the Militia of Maine from 1882 to 1886.

Dr. Hamlin is a great favorite with the veteran soldiers of the State and stands well with the laboring classes, to whom he has ever been friendly. He has always been an active worker for the Republican party but has never sought political preferment, although his friends have twice made him Mayor of Bangor by the largest majorities ever cast in that city, and in 1887 his name was freely mentioned as a possible candidate for the office of Governor, which his honored father so narrowly missed.

Dr. Hamlin has been engaged on a "History of the Eleventh Corps at Chancellorsville," which he has completed, with notes and carefully prepared maps showing the several positions of that Corps and of the Union and the Confederate forces during the first day's battle, with a view to right a great wrong done the men who composed the Eleventh Corps on the first day at Chancellorsville. This work is now in press.

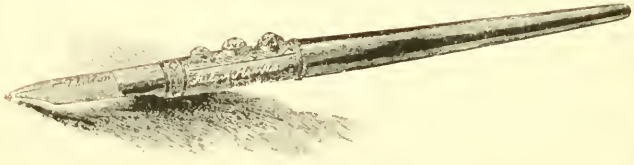

He has just issued an attractive volume, and very unique in character, entitled "The History of Mount Mica." And to him has been given the honor of having a newly discovered rhombohedral mineral named "Hamlinite," in view of his life-long interest in the development of the mineral resources of the State and particularly of Oxford County," where are found some of the most beautiful minerals known to science.

Dr. Hamlin suffered an unspeakable and irreparable loss in the sudden death, Nov. 30, 1891, of his only son, Frederick Cutting Hamlin, a young man nearly eighteen years of age, and of unusual promise and ability, possessing all noble qualities and commanding virtues.

Mrs. Hamlin, a daughter of Hon. Jonas and Lucretia Holland (Bennoch) Cutting, was born Sept. 8, 1839, in Bangor, Me. Her father was Judge of the Supreme Court of Maine. Her mother was an own cousin of Frances Bennoch, an English poet of London, England.

Helen Hamlin, their daughter, and now only child living, was born June 17, 1861. She married, Dec. 31, 1889, Edwin Hamlin, of Boston. He was born April 3, 1862. They reside in Brookline, Mass.

There occurred a little incident in the girlhood of Helen Hamlin which recalls a familiar fact of history concerning Bonnivard, the Prior of St. Victor, who became obnoxious to the Duke of Savoy, was imprisoned in the Castle of Chillon in 1530, and remained in confinement for six years. This Bonnivard has been immortalized by Byron's "Prisoner of Chillon." In 1879 Miss Hamlin presented to the poet Longfellow an iron pen, made from a bar of the iron gate of the prison of Chillon Castle, in which Bonnivard was confined, the handle made from the timber of the frigate "Constitution," and bound with a circlet of gold inset with three precious stones from Siberia, Ceylon, and Maine. This beautiful gift is commemorated by Longfellow in the lines of a sonnet entitled "The Iron Pen."

These graceful stanzas were sent to Miss Hamlin by the poet with the following autograph letter:—

CAMBRIDGE, June 20th, 1879.

Dear Mrs. Hamlin,—You will have thought me very ungrateful or very negligent or both, that I have not sooner written to thank you once more for your beautiful present. The truth is that since you were here I have been so much interrupted by visitors, and so much occupied with matters from which I could not disentangle myself, that I have not been able to write what I wanted to, in the way I wanted to. To-day I send you some lines, not written with the Pen, but about the Pen. I find that my hand is fettered by the bit of Bonnivard's chain, and moves more easily with a lighter quill. With kind remembrances and regards,

Yours sincerely,

HENRY W. LONGFELLOW.

P. S.—Perhaps at some future day if you have no objection, I may like to publish these lines in the "Atlantic."

The concluding lines of the poem are as follows:—

"I shall hear the sweet low tone
Of a voice before unknown,
Saying, 'This is from me to you—
From me, and to you alone.'

For the gift, and the grace of the gift,
O beautiful Helen of Maine!

"And in words not idle and vain
I shall answer and thank you again

"And forever this gift will be
As a blessing from you to me,
As a drop of the dew of your youth
On the leaves of an aged tree."

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE was a lad of but eleven years when his father died. His opportunities for an education were limited to the district school, one term, under Preceptor Vose.

DAVID CHOATE.

in the Atkinson Academy, New Hampshire, supplemented by access to a village library of a few hundred volumes, mostly biographical and historical, and association with some residents of the town who were cultured and scholarly, among whom were Drs. Mussey and Sewall and Rev. William Cogswell.

But possessed of rare intellectual gifts and having a great enthusiasm for study, even with these limited means of education, he was able, at the age of nineteen years, to enter upon his chosen life-work of teaching; and for twenty-seven years, at times under great physical disability, he prosecuted his work in the school-room and did much to inaugurate and develop the local High School in public education, which in later years has become its crowning glory. Mr. Choate's ability and success in teaching gave him a recognized prominence among educators.

In 1840 he was invited to take the position of the Principal of the New York Normal School in Albany, which on account of his ill health he was obliged to decline, and for the same reason, two years later, to give up teaching altogether. He was a progressive and efficient member of the School Committee of the town, and for the most part its Chairman, for thirty years. He was one of the founders of the Essex County Teachers' Association, acting at different periods as one of its Counsellors, Corresponding Secretary, Vice-President, and President. He was one of the seven men who were the pioneers and advisers of Miss Mary Lyon in establishing the Mount Holyoke Female Seminary, and was one of its trustees from its incorporation, in 1836, for eight years, and gave to it his hearty support as long as he lived. He was a trustee also for ten years, 1840-50, of Dummer Academy, Byfield, Mass. While in the State Legislature for three years, 1839-41, he was a member of the Committee on Education, and when in the Senate, 1841, was its Chairman. As a Justice of the Peace for many years he fulfilled his duties with good judgment, firmness, fidelity, and with acknowledged ability, fairness, and kindness.

Mr. Choate on various occasions showed rare oratorical power. It has been said of him, "His skill in adapting himself to the occasion and the auditors, his grasp of the subject, his exhaustive gathering up of materials, and ingenuity in grouping them, his fertility in illustration, his keen dissection of an opponent's argument, the sparkle of wit and play of the imagination, too, — the sword of Damascus blade, but wreathed in myrtle, — were just such as characterized his distinguished brother."

Mr. Choate took a life-long interest in agriculture, and was identified as a member and an officer in the Essex County Agricultural Society. Under its direction he made, in 1860, a survey, and prepared an elaborate paper of nearly a hundred pages, embodying the results, entitled "An Agricultural and Geological Survey of Essex County." This was published, by order of the society.

During his whole life he was an admirable example of what an American citizen should be. His rhetorical ability was frequently put to use in the service of the town. He was an earnest and unflinching supporter of everything conducive to the public welfare, whether in the sphere of industrial activities or of intelligence, morality, and virtue.

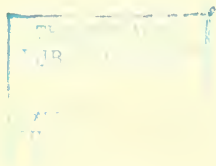

He had a passionate love of music, from boyhood played the base viol, for years taught singing schools, and for a period of nearly half a century led the church choir. He served as a deacon for about fifty years, and was an energetic and successful Superintendent of the Sunday School for about thirty-five years. As a testimonial of their appreciation of his long service, and a memorial of this godly man, the Sunday school erected an appropriate monument which marks the spot of his burial.

Deacon Choate, by his sterling character, and his services in educational, civil, and religious work, earned a high place in the esteem of his fellow townsmen, and commanded the respect and love of all who knew him.

MISS HANNAH E. CHOATE.

DEACON CHOATE'S only surviving daughter has been, for many years, the much-esteemed Principal of the Bentley Grammar School for Girls in Salem, Mass. Her services as a teacher and disciplinarian are highly appreciated by the School Board and by the citizens. She is a careful scholar, a person of dignity and great self-control, and having a quick sense of wise and efficient methods of instruction. She is a graduate of Mount Holyoke Seminary, and retains many of the ideals and secures many of the results which Mary Lyon set before her pupils as alone worthy of the women of the nineteenth century. She made a brief vacation trip to Europe in 1890.

RUFUS CHOATE, ADVOCATE.

IT was every way desirable that one who had personal recollections of Rufus Choate should prepare this sketch of his life and character. All the more was this the case inasmuch as the genius and the efforts of this man contributed so largely to the history of the family. There must yet be living many who can recall the charm of his personality and of his eloquence. Less than twenty years ago a writer remarked: "Boston swarms to-day with admirers of Choate." The present writer was never privileged to meet the great advocate. His eyes never watched those rapid and forceful gestures by which the soul sought to give expression to its passionate thoughts and feelings; his ears never drank in the music of that voice which charmed as the fabled lyre of old. It can only be imagined, the reluctance with which he undertakes to write. There is but one reflection to lead him to take heart of grace in this attempt. If those who knew the man, who saw him daily in court and at his home, who listened to his impassioned pleadings and to his familiar table-talk, if they despaired of being able to give us any adequate idea of their conception of his learning, his power, his genius, his worth, it certainly will not be expected of one who never stepped upon the vantage ground of personal intercourse that he should be free from misgivings in regard to his ability to bring into near and distinct view the shining qualities of a mind so highly gifted, of a character so nobly grand. I cannot but regret for myself the unfulfilled desire of my youth, but no doubt those for whom I now write can draw from the ample sources to which I am compelled to resort a better, a truer, a nobler idea of the man than I could have conveyed had I written under the most favorable circumstances. I recall that in the year of his death one of his biographers, Mr. Edward G. Parker, said: "After all that those who knew and loved Mr. Choate can do, he will be forever unknown to those who never saw and heard him." Still later on, Mr. Edwin P. Whipple wrote: "It is difficult for those who knew him to convey to a younger generation, which never passed under the wand of the magician, the effect which he produced on their own minds and hearts." How then can a writer who comes to this work as I must come, when he reads these admissions on the part of those who wrote from within the circle of personal friendship,—how can he have confidence in anything except in the benevolent indulgence of his readers?

It must be matter of profound satisfaction to us all that those who have written worthily of this member of our family have done so with manifest affection and esteem. They have shown us, as Mr. Whipple has shown us, "the effect which he produced on their own minds and hearts." I remember that Mr. Samuel Gilman Brown told me when his "Life of Rufus Choate" was completed, in 1862, that the work had been one of interest and love. Mr. Joseph Neilson said of the many contributors to his volume of "Memories" that "a loving spirit moved them, and presided over their work." The part which Mr. Neilson himself took in the preparation of that work abundantly proves his own affectionate devotion to the memory of a brother in professional life.

Rufus Choate was born on Choate Island, Chebacco Parish, the second precinct of Ipswich, "Tuesday, October 1, 1799, at 3 o'clock, P. M.," as the event was carefully recorded by his father in the family Bible. This place of his birth remained one of his homes as long as he lived. One of his homes, we say, because when he was only about six months old his father purchased a house in the village of Chebacco, still retaining possession of the farm on the Island. The summers of the lad were likely to be spent at the island home, the winters on the mainland. The situation of the farmhouse is well shown in a view of the Island presented on an earlier page. According to the writer's recollection, the house stands facing about south by east, to speak in the nautical language which ought to be almost our mother tongue. The slope in front, somewhat steep, a thick-matted sward always green, runs down fifteen or twenty rods, perhaps, to the broken bank of the creek. There is a fringe of bass-wood and other native trees along the shore. The near view is of marshes at low water, with a tidal stream winding and broadening down to the bay. At high water all that field is as a quiet lake. Its shelter from the sea is afforded by two bare arms of sand, — the Loaf, or, in the phrase of earlier times, Two-penny Loaf, — stretching up from the south towards Castle Neck, which is extended from the north. The whiteness of the sand of which these barriers to the sea are formed, and the rounded heaps into which it is drifted by the winds, deceive the unaccustomed eye with the appearance of snow. Between the two points there is left an open space through which one looks out upon the limitless sea. The character of the scene is sculpturesque. Its beauty consists in clearness and grace of outline, in boldness of relief, and in its setting of untarnished blue. We dwell thus particularly upon the outlook from the home of the boy, because a nature so sensitive as his must have received impressions from the surroundings in his early years that went with him through life. Those impressions were an essential part of his intellectual furnishing. They will account for the intensity and the constancy with which he loved the sea, for the magic of that charm which the sea always had for him.

That sensitiveness to which allusion has just now been made must have been a marked characteristic of the boy. So much would justly be inferred from the highly emotional nature of the man, but this point is not left to conjecture. In Mr. Brown's "Life" is given a personal reminiscence of his driving home the cows. "He has said that more than once, when he had thrown away his switch, he has returned to find it, and has carried it back, and thrown it under the tree from which he took it, for, he said, 'Perhaps there is, after all, some yearning of nature between them still.'" Upon only a single point should I question the correctness of his biographer's report of this incident. I should doubt the lad's having thrown the switch under the tree from which it had been broken. It is more natural to conceive of him tenderly laying the twig on the spot which it had overhung in its growth. This loving sympathy with Nature was never lost, never weakened even, in the midst of the engrossing cares and responsibilities of later public and professional life. Mr. E. P. Whipple says of him, "No one ever enjoyed Nature more intensely, but he never sojourned with her." There was marked out for him in his childhood a life of the most strenuous intellectual effort. These early impressions of nature, however, were to live in the memory of the man, as appears from the remark which he made to a friend whom he once met when on his way to take the train to Hanover, that he was going into the country to see if the birds were still singing as sweetly as they used to sing when he was a boy.

The training of home and of school began early with the bright, intelligent youth. Judge Neilson has said of him that "At an age when boys are expected to care for none of these things, he had a thirst for knowledge, a fondness for reading, and a fine sense of the use of words." It is reported of him that at six years of age he had "devoured the Pilgrim's Progress," and that before he was ten he had read most of the books in the village library. Of this earlier education the writer just now quoted says, "Beneficent influences, acting on a delicate, docile, susceptible, emotional nature, — a nature easily chilled, if not perverted, by contact with the world, — had been at work in advance of the schools. Thus it was that, in due time, the boy went out from those schools mature in moral and intellectual strength, prepared to exercise the manly patience given to his riper studies." Rev. Richard S. Storrs also said of this Chebacco school-boy: "He was a scholar by instinct and by the determining force of his nature." The philosophical habit of the present time would lead one to look upon this instinct as being a part of his inheritance. We should expect to find its source in the character and in the lives of his ancestors. In the direct line, on the paternal side, none of these had enjoyed the privileges and the benefits of a liberal education. The first of the name in this country had witnessed to his appreciation of what the value of a collegiate course might be by leaving funds for the expenses of his youngest child at Harvard. The older sons, from one of whom Rufus was descended, were forced by circumstances to start in life with no such advantage. Four generations had served the province and the town, in civil and in military life, with faithfulness and ability. They had employed tongue and pen upon matters of public interest. They had, no doubt, felt keenly the want of proper training for their work. The father had entered the Continental Army at the age of nineteen. For him the camp was college and professional school. He left it to follow the seas. At the birth of his son these longings had been suppressed, these hopes had been deferred, these high views had been maintained for more than a hundred and fifty years. They became the impelling forces of the generation to which Rufus belonged. There had, we may well suppose, been passed down the line from the founder of our family upon these shores the tradition that at some time, when private needs were not too pressing, when public demands were not too urgent, there should be some of the lineage called to show what strength of reason, what power of imagination, what nimbleness of fancy had been busy in the active brain of the past. In the case of this gifted child reason, ambition, and conscience were fused into a fine and noble enthusiasm for learning. Had he been born into the life of ancient Greece he would have been the darling of the Muses, bred by them to the genial pursuits of taste; but born as he was into a Puritan family in Puritan New England, he was trained to the practice of virtues at home, at school to a knowledge of such things as the schools could teach. It was for him, later on, to show to the world, in the purity of his professional life, in the patriotism of his public service, in the wisdom of his statesmanship, in the beauty of his own home, the high worth of the Puritan training of his boyhood.

Rufus Choate was admitted to the Freshman Class of Dartmouth College in the summer of 1815, before he was yet quite sixteen years of age. His preparatory studies must have been carried on in no very systematic way; but he had the advantage of having received from several different teachers the best that they had to give in the way of instruction, and this, to a boy like him, was worth much. It is reported that he began the study of Latin, under Dr. Thomas Sewell, at the age of ten. During the next six years his studies were continued for a few months yearly under the direction of the minister of the parish, Rev. Mr. Holt, or the teachers of the district school. Among these latter was the Rev. Dr. William Cogswell, then an undergraduate. In January of 1815, the boy was sent as a pupil to the academy in Hampton, N. H., to finish his preparatory course. At Dartmouth he was admitted to a class of which only two members were younger than he. How the young collegian impressed his fellows may be learned from the recollections of his associates. Dr. Boyden, of Beverly, wrote on this point as follows: "We entered college together in 1815. He was between fifteen and sixteen years of age, very youthful and engaging in appearance, modest and unpretentious in manner. Several students, fresh from Andover, entered at the same time. They were more fully prepared than he, and, at the start, showed to better advantage in their recitations. But by and by some of these began to fall from their first estate, and it was remarked about the same time that 'That young Choate in the corner recited remarkably well.' Before the end of the first term he was the acknowledged leader of the class, and he maintained that position until graduation, without apparent difficulty. No one pretended to rival him, nor did he invite comparison. He paid little attention to the proficiency of his fellow-students. His talk was of eminent scholars of other countries and of former times, and they seemed the objects of his emulation." In this last clause we may easily discover the secret of his great success. There were no limitations of his efforts simply to meet the requirements of the college or the expectation of those about him. His studies were carried far beyond the prescribed course. He entered the list with the orators of Athens to compete with them for the crown. This was he able to do by grace of that imagination which enabled him to realize the proudest traditions of the past. He, unconsciously no doubt, revealed this source of his power as a student and as an orator to his son-in-law when, pointing to a rocky, cavernous knoll as they were driving from Ipswich to Essex, he said, "There is the descent to Avernus." We may feel pretty certain that this remark was nothing more than the recalling an identification which had been made by him when he read Virgil in his boyhood. It was this familiar and constant play of the imagination which made him delight in the acquisition of learning; it gave him uses for all that he acquired.

Of his student life at Hanover we get a glimpse in the recollections of Hon. Nathan Crosby, who was his junior in college by one year. The account is that "Mr. Choate was sociable as well as studious, but did not care for play. He found exercise in walks over the hills around the college, and up and down his room while pursuing his studies. Choate's room was of ready access to his mates, and was a sort of centre of mirth and wit; but when sport was over he turned to his studies with avidity." This avidity for study explains the lack of interest in athletic games. It was the ruling passion. To a painful degree it accounts for the haggard look his features wore in later years. Such tasks as the young student was then setting for himself and was in good faith performing were too much for his strength. Before his college course was completed it is reported that "his place in the recitation-room was often vacant, his condition a source of anxiety and alarm." At his graduation he was the valedictorian of his class. Mr. Crosby describes his appearance on that occasion: "He advanced slowly and feebly, as if struggling to live and to perform this as a last scholarly duty. Tall and emaciated, closely wrapped in his black gown, with his black, curly hair overshadowing his sallow features, he tremblingly saluted the trustees and officers of the college, and proceeded in tremulous and subdued tones with his address, which was full of beautiful thoughts couched in chaste and elegant language." The closing sentences of that valedictory carry with them the impression that the speaker himself anticipated no great length of days as his inheritance. "Go," said he, "go forward, my classmates, with all your honors and all your hopes. You will leave me behind, lingering or cut short in my way; but I shall carry to my grave, however, wherever, whenever I shall be called hence, the delightful remembrance of our joys and of our love."

The year following his graduation was spent by Mr. Choate as tutor in the college. Professor Brown has characterized this year as being one that was "to him, and almost equally to his pupils, a year all sunshine." In that warm and mellow sunshine was ripened to delicately flavored fruit the learning which he had acquired in his undergraduate course. Or to go out from the garden upon the dusty track and taking our language from that of the Grecian games, we may say that he had set the pace for his running mates, and he now had a chance to watch the keen emulation which his career had excited.

His professional studies were begun at the Dane Law School of Harvard, in 1820, and they were continued there for the first year. In the following year he entered the law office of William Wirt at Washington. This step seems very likely to have been taken upon the advice and through the good offices of his brother-in-law, Dr. Sewall, who was then residing in that city. He there had opportunities to hear the most eloquent advocates of the country. It is not unreasonable to suppose that so far as his style of speaking was the result of study and imitation of any modern models it was formed upon what he heard that year at the nation's capital. But before the winter was over he was recalled from that pleasant field of study and of observation by the death of his younger brother, Washington, who died Feb. 27, 1822. Those studies so painfully interrupted were resumed with Mr. Asa Andrews, of Ipswich, and were later pursued with Judge Cummings, of Salem, until the young student was admitted to the bar in September, 1823. He began the practice of his profession at South Danvers, now Peabody, where he remained four or five years. In these years he twice represented the town in the Lower House of the General Court, and was one year in the Senate. In 1825 he married Helen Olcott, the daughter of Mills Olcott, Esq., of Hanover, N. H. This marriage was naturally the outcome of an earlier acquaintanceship formed in the undergraduate days of his college life. His biographer has spoken of it as being "one of the many felicitous circumstances of Mr. Choate's early career. It brought him sympathy, encouragement, and support."

That professional career already entered upon with success was to be followed for almost forty years with an unflagging enthusiasm. It was to be interrupted by few vacations other than those which he himself described as the intervals occurring between the question of the examining counsel and the answer of the witness. It was varied only by terms of arduous public service in the two Houses of Congress and in the Constitutional Convention of the State. It was relieved by studies critical and profound upon questions of governmental policy. One short visit to Europe was the only relaxation allowed, and even that brief respite from toil was dedicated to the favorite pursuits of his youth. The contests of the courts were engaged in as the games were entered upon at Olympia, they were fought out as the gladiatorial combats were fought at Rome. The rights of his clients were sacred as were the rights of a herald of old. To secure those rights with the safeguards of law were bent all the energies of that mind trained to bring its forces into effective action. There was no stint of knowledge, wit, or strength. All the stores of learning were exhausted, all the graces of speech were displayed, all the gifts of eloquence were lavished to win Victory over to his side. When he died it was said that "the sunlight faded from the forum," that "his loss took from the profession its most stimulating example, its most splendid and charming illustration."

The great reputation of Rufus Choate as an advocate was won in the courts of law, in conducting the everyday actions of assumpsit, contract, and debt, replevin, trover, and tort. Here was his chosen field of activity. This was the work for which he had fitted himself, and in which he found his delight. From the nature of the case that reputation must be almost wholly traditional. No reports of cases contain the arguments of counsel; and if they did, they would help us little towards realizing the impassioned ardor with which the pleadings were made. Few of Mr. Choate's briefs have been preserved. In his "Reminiscences," Mr. Parker devotes about a hundred pages to these "Forensic Arguments," as he calls them, and to those pages the reader is referred. Upon this portion of the volume its author remarks: "His jury appeals are mostly preserved only in loose MS., and can be found nowhere else than here."

Rufus Choate was elected to the Twenty-second Congress, and he took his seat in the House of Representatives Dec. 5, 1831. Two years later he was re-elected to the Twenty-third Congress by an increased majority. He served through the first session of this Congress, when he resigned his seat and returned to the practice of his profession. Thus the term of his service in the Lower House extended from Dec. 5, 1831, to June 30, 1834. The resignation of Mr. Choate must be regarded as purely a matter of choice. It was in keeping with his well-known view that the bar was the place for him. His laying aside the office does not necessarily imply any lack of public interest or of patriotism. There was at the time nothing in the way of his keeping the seat or giving it up. There would be no occasion to say a word about his retirement here had not certain persons tried to account for it as they would account for their own withdrawal from public office. He resigned this place as he at times declined a seat upon the bench. The claims of his family, the strong prepossession of his mind in favor of studies which he could not pursue in public life, appear to have determined his action.

Once more, however, some ten years later, he entered public life again. This time it was to serve out the unexpired term of Daniel Webster in the Senate. Mr. Webster had entered the Cabinet of President Harrison, and had continued to hold his portfolio under the administration of President Tyler. This service of Mr. Choate's in the Senate lasted from March 1, 1841, to March 3, 1845. It was in the first year of this term, July 2, 1841, that Henry Clay and Mr. Choate came into sharp collision in debate. The matter was in itself of trifling importance; but it has, in these later years, been made use of to show that the Massachusetts Senator was lacking in moral courage, — that he was browbeaten and cowed by the great Whig leader. The debate was upon the Fiscal Bank Bill. Mr. Clay wanted the bill to pass without amendment. Mr. Choate intimated that the bill, unless amended, would be vetoed. Clay then pressed the speaker to give the source of his information. His object was to make it appear that Mr. Webster was using his position of confidential counsel to influence legislation improperly. The debate may be found reported at length in the Congressional Record of the day. We quote the closing passages of the colloquy: —

"MR. CHOATE. I gave my conviction. The Senator from Kentucky asked me what grounds I rested my belief upon. I replied that I had based it on facts and deductions I did not think proper to disclose. I did not, in giving convictions from a belief I could not control, imply that I had any executive authority for what I stated.

"MR. CLAY. Will the gentleman say that he did not, in answer to my direct interrogatory, state that he could not disclose the source of his convictions without a breach of privilege and violation of parliamentary rule?

"Mr. Choate again attempted to explain, but was interrupted by Mr. Clay.

"MR. CLAY. That, sir, is not the thing. Did you not say that you could not, without breach of privilege and violation of parliamentary rule, disclose your authority?"

"MR. CHOATE. I insist, sir, on my right to explain what I did say, in my own words.

"Mr. Clay requested a direct answer to the question proposed by him.

"Mr. Choate said he would have to take the answer as he gave it to him.

"Mr. Preston [of South Carolina] rose and called the Senators to order."

It is enough to add that the next morning, in the Senate chamber, Mr. Clay offered an explanation in the nature of an apology for his rudeness. Mr. Choate harbored no feeling of resentment, and there the matter was dropped so far as the two participants were concerned. Choate frequently spoke of Clay with admiration for that statesman's character and eloquence. Years after the debate, he wrote to Mr. Parker from England, saying, "They have no Henry Clay here in this House of Commons." That he could have answered Clay in a tone as imperious as the latter had used is shown by his speech in the Senate, replying to Mr. McDuffie. He preferred simply to shield Mr. Webster, as he was in honor and friendship bound to do, by maintaining strict silence even at the risk of being misunderstood. We should not have given the incident this prominence had not Mr. Hugh McCullough and others made it the ground of their opinion that Mr. Choate lacked the courage needed by a political leader. — as though he were forced out of public life by men who, if the truth were told, would be known to have admired and loved him. We can believe that his language was sincere when he said, "If a man goes much into politics with law, he will have no leisure for much cultivation and gratification of tastes." His tastes and predilections were stronger than his political ambition, and his retirement from public life was entirely in accordance with his desires and his plans.

It was in the Senate that Mr. Choate delivered those speeches by which he is best known. Of the speeches on the Oregon question, on the Annexation of Texas, the Tariff, and the United States Courts, Mr. Parker says, "They were carefully prepared as I very well know." These are to be found in Brown's "Life and Works of Rufus Choate." It is not without interest for us to see how those volumes were received by the literary critic at the time of their first publication, in 1862. Allibone's Dictionary quotes from "The Nation" as follows: "Two-thirds of this collection are historical or literary addresses called forth by special occasions; the rest are political speeches. The latter, contrary to what would be expected, are much the best. All are disfigured by a very bad style." We are ready to admit that if we take the style of the ordinary literary critic as the standard, that of Rufus Choate was flagrantly vicious; but if we bear in mind the words of Webster, "After all, say I, he is an orator that can make me think as he thinks, and feel as he feels," and take into account the times and the places in which these orations were delivered, the purposes which they were designed to accomplish, and which from the lips of the speaker they were made to accomplish, that style is found to be every way admirable. It was, however, the orator's own. It courted no rivalry, it was proof against the skill of the counterfeiter. It baffles all attempts to characterize or define. In reading these addresses, however, we are made conscious that they are the exact counterpart of the mind which produced them. They reveal to us the working of the orator's thought, the play of his fancy, the mood of his feeling. We choose for an example of his work, not from those carefully prepared political speeches which "The Nation" has pronounced his best, but from the Fourth of July oration delivered in the Tremont Temple, at Boston, 1858. This was his last public effort to which he came with any preparation. We quote a few of its opening sentences: —

"It is well that in our year, so busy, so secular, so discordant, there comes one day when the word is, and when the emotion is, 'our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country.' It is well that law — our only sovereign on earth — duty, not less the daughter of God, not less within her sphere supreme — custom, not old alone, but honored and useful — memories, our hearts, have set a time in which, scythe, loom, and anvil stilled, shops shut, wharves silent, the flag — our flag unrent — the flag of our glory and commemoration waving on mast-head, steeple, and highland, we may come together and walk hand in hand, thoughtful, admiring, through these galleries of civil greatness; when we may own together the spell of one hour of our history upon us all; when faults may be forgotten, kindnesses revived, virtues remembered and sketched unblamed; when the arrogance of reform, the excesses of reform, the strifes of parties, the rivalries of regions, shall give place to a wider, warmer, and juster sentiment; when turning from the corners and dark places of offensiveness, if such the candle lighted by malignity, or envy, or censoriousness, or truth, has revealed anywhere; when, turning from these, we may go up together to the serene and secret mountain top, and there pause, and there unite in the reverent exclamation, and in the exultant prayer, 'How beautiful at last are thy tabernacles! What people at last is like unto thee! Peace be within thy palaces and joy within thy gates! The high places are thine, and there shalt thou stand proudly, and innocently, and securely.'"

In this one paragraph the orator mounts "to the height of this great argument" for national unity and peace. The unfolding of his theme recalls the boldness of a Pindaric flight. It justifies to our credulity the boast of Horace that he felt the pinions springing on his shoulders. If we have ever seen the easy grace of that upward movement rivalled it has been when we in the wonderland of childhood were watching the flight of an eagle as he mounted into the skies, soaring by means no more discoverable than his path through the viewless air, swinging from side to side of that spiral way which led beyond our sight, not the sign given of any effort made, not the curving of a wing perceptible, at one time flashing his silver crown in the open sunlight, at another time vanishing in the enveloping shadow of a cloud, to be watched for and waited for by the patient, spell-bound eye at a point in that symmetrical curve where that ever lessening form should again reappear bathed in the splendor of day, relieved against a background of night, until, raised above the region of clouds, in the cold, thin æther of the heavens, it rested through a summer's noontide heat, rocked as it were on the billows of air.

After a long, earnest, impassioned plea, a plea for harmony, for peace, order, and the reconciliation of rights; a plea for union, — for the Union of the States, — such a plea as on occasion he had made in the courts a few years before for the sanctity of the marriage tie, when he came to the close of his oration with words of hope, of high courage, of whole-souled devotion to his country, to the country of his listeners, expressions of fullest confidence in the patriotism of the people, in the genius of liberty, of boundless faith in the providence of God, these words so breathed the trusting spirit, the calmed emotions, the reflective thoughts, that they slowly sank, gently, softly, musically, into the low, sweet cadence of an evening song.

"But why, at last," said he, "do I exhort, and why do I seem to fear, on such a day as this? Is it not the nation's birthday? Is it not this country of our love and hopes which celebrates it? This music of the glad march, these banners of pride and beauty, these memories so fragrant, these resolutions of patriotism, so thoughtful, these hands pressed, these congratulations and huzzas, and tears, this great heart throbbing audibly, — are they not hers, and do they not assure us? These forests of masts, these singing workshops of labor, these fields and plantations whitening for the harvest, this peace and plenty, this sleeping thunder, these bolts in the closed, strong talon, — do not they tell us of her health, her strength, and her future? This shadow that flits across our grasses and is gone, this shallow ripple that darkens the surface of our broad and widening stream, and passes away, this little perturbation which our telescopes cannot find, and which our science can hardly find, but which we know cannot change the course or hasten the doom of one star, — have these any terror for us? And He who slumbers not, nor sleeps, who keeps watchfully the city of His love, on whose will the life of nations is suspended, and to whom all the shields of the earth belong, our father's God, is He not our God? And of whom, then, and of what shall we be afraid?"

"This shadow that flits across our grasses and is gone" was an allusion easily understood when we recall that those words were spoken only three years before the breaking out of the Civil War. It was, then, not because the orator failed to appreciate the gravity of the situation that he treated this as a trifle; it was his purpose to reassure the hearts of all with the firm belief that somehow the American Union was going to withstand the fury of that storm whose shadow was even then flitting across our grasses. He had for some time foreseen the coming crisis. In Mr. Neilson's "Memories," p. 201, there is reported a conversation between Mr. Choate and his son-in-law, Mr. Edward Ellerton Pratt, in the summer of 1856. "They were sitting on the rocks at Marblehead, and looking over the waters in which the frigate 'Constitution' was chased by British cruisers in the War of 1812-14. Mr. Pratt says, 'In speaking of that war, the question arose as to the next struggle in which this country might be engaged. Mr. Choate said, 'I shall not probably live to see it, but I fear there will ere long be a civil war between the North and the South.' I expressed my horror at such an idea, and asked how that could be possible. Said he, "It is a very easy thing to get up such a conflict when one large section of the country, inflamed by interest, pride, and resentment, is hostile and united. We at the North, if we wished, could bring it about; so could they of the South; and the adverse feeling is getting so bitter that one side or the other may provoke the issue. If the Democrats, now about to elect Buchanan, have prudence and good temper, they can tide the trouble over for a while, perhaps until there may come a better understanding and more friendly feeling. But I fear they will not show such moderation and prudence." Mr. Choate appeared to think it probable that within ten years a civil war would break out, and told me that it would be my duty, the duty of all, to do what was possible to maintain the Union, whether war could or could not be averted."

Mr. Choate was spared the realization of these anxious fears. Elsewhere in this volume will be told what his only son, and what the husband of his oldest daughter did "to maintain the Union," when war could no longer be averted. Had he lived he would cheerfully have made the great sacrifice.

In all his previous life Rufus Choate had been closely identified with the old Whig party. He had served it with fidelity, had joined in its rallies, and rejoiced in its victories; at its hands had he received his civic honors. In the Senate and on the stump had he advocated the measures which that party upheld. When, therefore, he decided to vote for Buchanan, — his conversation reveals the misgivings with which that vote was to be cast, — the course which he then took led him apart from most of his former associates. It was an early instance of independent voting, a feature of our politics which has become familiar in later times. It exposed him in the last years of his life to much harsh, censorious criticism. To this William Winter lately referred when he said, "During the latter part of Choate's life, and at the time of his death, detraction, always busy with shining names, was audible in his disfavor." But time has softened the feelings of men, has refined and mellowed their judgment, until now they can find in his speeches the wisdom of the statesman; in his conduct the self-sacrificing devotion of the patriot. Most beautifully is this latter character recognized in "The Patriot's Birthplace," a poem which its distinguished author, Mrs. James T. Fields, tells me was written with direct reference to that old homestead on Choate Island: —

"Wide across the Continent
Speaks the patriot's deathless word;
Blossoms on the rocky hills,
In the vales is heard.

"I will give the Morning Star
'To him,' the Lord saith, 'who shall keep My work unailing to the end,
Nor ever slothful sleep.'

"Built up of our larger hope,
Of equal laws and equal right,
His home shall only oceans bind,
Nor ages quench his light."

Along with the public service of Mr. Choate in Congress must be classed his labors in behalf of the Smithsonian Institution. He had devised and advocated what was known as the "Library Plan." This provided for a collection of books, of objects of art, ancient and modern, worthy the nation's capital. In urging this plan he was following the bent of his literary, scholastic, and artistic tastes. He had long appreciated the real condition of literature and art in this country. As early as 1823 he wrote, "How wretchedly adapted is our American liberal education and our subsequent course of life, to form and mature a mind of so much depth, taste, and beautiful enlargement. How vulgar and untaught we generally are with all our unquestionable natural capacity." With these strong sentiments for liberal training, he was elected a member of the first Board of Regents of the Smithsonian in 1846. In the course of a few years the management of the Institution fell into the control of those who favored the claims of science over those of literature. In 1854 Mr. Choate resigned.

There can be no doubt that it had long been a fondly-cherished plan of the advocate to devote some portion of his maturer years to literature. When he was abroad in 1850, attracted by more than the Europe of this century can offer, he defined this purpose, "to gather up these moments, consolidate and mould them into something worthy of myself, which may do good where I am not known, and live when I shall have ceased to live—a thoughtful and soothing and rich printed page." And at another time he wrote, "Some memorial I would leave yet, rescued from the grave of a mere professional life, some wise, or beautiful, or interesting page,—something of utility to America, which I love more every pulse that beats."

This sentiment of patriotism, this love for his country, as of his home, the home of his kindred and friends, a yearning for the familiar scenes of his earlier and his later life, breathes in all he wrote while he was abroad in 1850. He was evidently contemplating, if not preparing, some treatise—possibly upon the early history of our free institutions. He left these plans unaccomplished with regret; but he needed not to entertain any fear of "the grave of a mere professional life." What he himself said of the orators of the Revolutionary period can now, with perfect propriety, be said of him: "Of that series of spoken eloquence all is perished: not one reported sentence has come down to us. The voice through which the rising spirit of a young nation sounded out its dream of life is hushed. The great spokesman, of an age unto an age, is dead. And yet, of those lost words is not our whole America one immortal record and reporter? Do ye not read them, deep cut, defying the tooth of time, on all the marble of our greatness? How they blaze on the pillars of our Union! How is their deep sense unfolded and interpreted by every passing hour! how do they come to life, and grow audible, as it were, in the brightening rays of the light he foresaw, as the fabled invisible harp gave out its music to the morning!"

Two years ago it was reported that by the will of Mary W. Hyde, of New York, the city of Boston was to receive the sum of fourteen thousand dollars for the purpose of erecting a statue of Rufus Choate. When the intent of the testator shall be carried out, we may hope to see the presentment of the man as described by William W. Story, the poet and the artist.— to see —

". . . the clustering hair
And flashing eyes of Choate, whose rare
Full-worded eloquence had power to thrill
And move and mould his hearers at his will."

Then once more, in visible form, in enduring bronze, will Choate be grouped with Webster and with Everett, here, in the city of his love,— of their love,— amid the scenes of their unenvying rivalry in learning and in eloquence, as Mr. Story has so picturesquely grouped them in his verse: —

"In Massachusetts of our later years
Three men have lived pre-eminent in fame,
Your statesmen they; This one the kingly name
Of our DEFENDER won, when doubts and fears
Shook our sad hearts; That, as the morn appears
Through lustrous clouds; and on his silvery tongue
Sweet, rich and full, persuasive accents hung:
THE OTHER, as amid the flaming spheres
A constellation, glittering with the light
Of many a star, illuminates the night:
Living, they were the lions of their kind;
Dead, as they rest, each in his honored grave,
Though creatures at their memory rave,
Stand, and will stand, three monuments of mind."

Early in the spring of 1859 Mr. Choate was forced by increasing illness to withdraw from the practice of his profession. He had been failing for many months, possibly for some years, a sufferer from Bright's disease, then little understood. He fancied that a short residence in England—the Isle of Wight seemed most attractive to him—might alleviate his disorder. Passage was secured on a steamer which was to leave Boston about the middle of May. Not feeling himself equal to the voyage at that time he deferred his departure. On the 24th of May he went to the home of his son-in-law, Mr. Bell, in Dorchester. Here he spent a month in quiet rest. "Never had he seemed to enjoy every object with a keener relish. 'What can a person do?' he once said, after looking long at a beautiful landscape. 'Life is not long enough.'" It soon became necessary for him to decide if he would go abroad that summer. On the 29th of June he took passage on the "Europa." He could not have been unaware of his critical condition, that he was probably embarking on a longer voyage than that across the Atlantic. The weariness of travel proved more than he had strength to bear, and at midnight of the 30th he was landed with his son at Halifax. Here, under the care of the surgeon on board the flag-ship of the Admiral of the British fleet, he waited patiently for the end. His window overlooked that beautiful harbor, and from it he watched the ships, with his old love of the sea. "If a schooner or sloop goes by," he once said, when dropping into a doze, "don't disturb me, but if there is a square-rigged vessel, wake me up." He remained constantly cheerful and hopeful. On the 12th of July the doctor encouraged him that he would soon be able to go home. He had been better that day, but before night he said to his son that he felt faint. These were his last words. At twenty minutes before two o'clock the next morning it was all over. The voyage was ended, and the great square-rigged vessel swung round to her anchor in the home port.

MRS. CHOATE survived her lamented husband a few years. She was a woman of most rare and interesting qualities of mind, heart, and life. This is well reflected by the published mention made of her at the time of her death, of which an example is the following:—

AN OBITUARY OF MRS. HELEN OLCOTT CHOATE, DECEMBER, 1864.

Died at Roxbury, on the 8th inst., Helen Olcott, widow of the late Hon. Rufus Choate.

It is not fit to permit the announcement of the death of Mrs. Choate to be the sole record of one who has left behind her the recollection of so many endearing qualities of heart and mind.

Mrs. Choate was the daughter of Hon. Mills Olcott of Hanover, N. H., of whom his biographer wrote that the ideal of the perfect gentleman could scarcely "find itself more adequately embodied than in him." His home was one of the most delightful it was ever our good fortune to be familiar with, characterized by the old-school tone of politeness, gentle courtesy, and regard for the happiness of others. It was amidst the attractions and healthful influences of such a fireside, that the character of Mrs. Choate unfolded and matured. Her clear reason, united to a spirit of repose and self-control, which were manifested by uniform serenity and cheerfulness, gave to her living presence its life-long, distinguishing power. The calm and loving influence of Christian faith, which seemed to have been born in her, no doubt helped to lay the foundation of this self-sustaining element of her character. No pressure of trial or calamity could stir the deep currents of her spirit. Always firm, always serene, she was the sheet-anchor of strength and hope to all who clung to her for happiness and courage through life. To her husband, amidst the exhausting and harassing weariness of his long and arduous professional career, she was.—

"The heart which like a staff was one
For him to lean and rest upon,
The strongest on the longest day
With steadfast love."

To her children and to those who came within the sanctuary of her affections, who can overestimate her exalted merit, or fully appreciate their irreparable loss? Language is powerless to express for them our sympathy, as the grave closes over one of those who may be classed among the pure in heart who shall see God. B.

CAPT. RUFUS CHOATE.

RUFUS CHOATE, only son of the late Hon. Rufus Choate, was born May 14, 1834, in Boston, Mass., and died Jan. 15, 1866, in Dorchester, Mass. His death is noticed as follows:—

"Another victim of the late Civil War has passed away. One more family mourns the loss of a brother, brave and gifted. Yet their mourning is not without gladness, nor is their loss without compensation. Death cannot take all. The fond and happy memories of love given and returned; of the happy days of childhood with no cloud in the sky, when the family circle was still unbroken, and before sorrow, suffering, or death had entered in at the door; of that later and proud day when the only son and brother offered his life for the cause,—these all remain forever and forever.

"When our Civil War broke out Mr. Choate was in the practice of law in this city, having, for a young man just started in his profession, a large clientage. Everything looked prosperous for him. There was every inducement—selfishly speaking—for him to remain at home. But the echoes from Sumter had scarcely ceased before he had offered his services to the Government—'for the war.'

"He was determined, to use his own language, 'to see the thing through,' and for this reason, among others, joined the Second Massachusetts Regiment, which was, we believe, the first in the country organized for that length of time. Mr. Choate remained with his regiment till the autumn of 1862, when the disease which attacked him shortly after he joined the army compelled him to resign his commission. He returned to his home hoping that in a few months his health would be sufficiently restored to enable him to again join his regiment. But this hope was not to be realized. The disease contracted, or at least greatly aggravated, by the exposure he was subjected to in the malarious Virginia swamps held on to him with frightful tenacity that nothing could relax.

"His sufferings during the last four years have been almost uninterrupted and almost incredible. Death is to him literally a release. Yet during the whole time he showed the same sweetness of temper, the same patience, the same uncomplainingness that had always characterized him. 'And yet they say I suffer,' said he, when the horrors of Andersonville were read to him. 'Through those four long and dreary years he completely ignored his own sufferings, except when he tried to show their lightness when compared with those of others.'

"The testimony of his brother officers, as well as of all who had ever known him well, is unanimous as to his wit, his humor, and his unfailing humanity. And, indeed, the son of his father took these by inheritance. When he resigned his commission one of them wrote: 'Choate has left, and with him goes the life of the regiment. No more fun now, but simple duty.'

"At the battle of Cedar Mountain he and three other officers of the same regiment were so ill that none but themselves thought of their taking part in the impending conflict. Not so they, however. They were helped or carried on to the field. One present wrote: 'All our officers behaved nobly. Those who ought to have stayed away would n't. Goodwin, Cary, Choate, and Stephen Perkins were all quite ill, but would not stay away from the fight. Choate is the only one of the four not killed. It was splendid to see those sick fellows walk right into that shower of bullets as if it were so much rain.'

"The reveille has now sounded for the last of the noble four, and he has gone to join his comrades and answer to his name when the roll is called."

AN OBITUARY OF SARAH BLAKE CHOATE.

Died in Boston, on March 11, 1875, Sarah Blake Choate, daughter of the late Hon. Rufus Choate.

GONE from us! gone love and gentleness, and womanly grace and charity, and all that makes life worth dying for,—or, better still, worth living for.

No one ever came within her influence and went away uncharmed. From her, goodness seemed to radiate,—was diffused,—so that one could scarcely be with her half an hour without feeling that on the whole the world was better than he thought—that the presence of one such was a suggestion of what we may become. An invalid the greater part of her life, her circle, of course, was not large, nor was she known in what is generally called society; but to those who knew her, she was a magnet of never-ceasing power, and their love for her grew and grew, even to the end. Her charity was unobtrusive and unknown except to its recipients. She gave what almost all begrudge the most, her time, and taught the poor and friendless that in her they had a friend indeed. By gentle solicitations and for His name's sake, she lured them on to higher thoughts and higher deeds, and by her teaching, and, better still, by her example, showed that we were all of one blood and of one Creator.

To say that she was witty and wise is to say that she was her father's daughter, and from him she inherited her love for all scholarly pursuits. Also she took by inheritance that rarest of gifts, a rich, tender, melodious voice. Her speech was music, gentle and alluring, so that when pleading for the wretched and forlorn, by some subtle influence of voice or manner or magnetism, or combination of these, her cause was won before her statement was ended. In these respects those who knew her father will recognize his daughter.

But what a loss we have in her, yet is hers the gain. She has lived a life of perfect right, as she understood the right to be.

She has passed from us with "no slow gradations of decay," but with faculties undimmed and love and hopes unchilled. To her the rest and the exceeding great peace have come.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE seems to have inherited a passion for the sea, and at twenty years of age, against the wishes of his father, he became a sailor. With a small bundle under his arm he left his home, walked to Newburyport, Mass., and shipped "before the mast" on the merchant ship "Reward," on a three years' voyage. If possible to dissuade him, his father had told him that he should claim his wages until he was twenty-one. At the end of the three years the young sailor returned to his father's house, brought his earnings in coin, and having shaken hands with his father he tossed the money on the table, saying: "There, father, are my wages." The tender-hearted parent walked to the window and wiped away his tears, but took none of the money. Mr. Choate still followed the seas until he became master of the vessel on which he first sailed. The War of 1812 so endangered the business that he sold his ship in a foreign port and returned home on a French vessel. Shortly after, the ship "Reward" was captured by a British privateer and burned. Thus ended his career on the ocean, although his love for the sea remained, and he always read with delight the one hundred and seventh Psalm which delineates so vividly a ship on the billows of the ocean. It is narrated that, when in England, he was once summoned as a witness at a court over which Lord Ellenborough presided. To the various inquiries of his lordship he answered simply, "Yes, sir," "No, sir." As the term "Sir" in England is thus used in addressing an inferior, a lawyer engaged in the case became excited, and indignantly asked, "What country were you born in, that you presume to answer his lordship 'Yes, sir,' and 'No, sir?' " Mr. Choate, nearly six feet in height, with a physique of one hundred and eighty pounds avoirdupois, an eye black as a coal and sparkling as a fixed star, and a voice clear as a silver trumpet, turned upon the attorney and said, "I was born in a country where there is but one Lord, and that is the Lord in the heavens." The scene was too much for the gravity of Lord Ellenborough, and he shook with laughter until the powder from his wig gave a gray tinge to his judicial robe.

Mr. Choate, returning to Londonderry, engaged for many years in mercantile pursuits, and afterwards, besides conducting the work on a farm, devoted himself to public affairs. He represented the old town of Londonderry two years in the Legislature, and the town of Derry, after the division, in 1829 and 1839. He was one of the selectmen of Londonderry two years, and of Derry one. He had remarkable powers as a presiding officer, and was elected moderator of the town meeting four years in Londonderry, and fifteen in Derry. He held this office fourteen years in succession. In the most exciting scenes he never lost control of the assembly. When the question arose as to the division of the town, in the midst of an angry debate at midnight, suddenly every light in the house was extinguished. He was presiding on the occasion, and above the uproar the clarion notes of his voice were heard ordering every man to keep his seat until the lamps should be relighted, and every man obeyed.

When he was teaching a school, a parent came in and angrily called him to account for "whipping his boy." Captain Choate, as he was familiarly called, ordered the man to take a seat, and so commanding was his air, that the man was overawed, and took a seat. Mr. Choate then put a book in his hand and kept him there to the close of the school hours, and then said to him, "The next time you come to school bring your own book."

For five years he was a director of the Derry Bank. For forty-three years he was a trustee of the Pinkerton Academy, continuing in office until his death, and for sixteen years he was treasurer of that institution.

After his decease the trustees entered a minute upon their records in which they say, "Mr. Choate, from its origin, was deeply interested in the prosperity of the institution. He, with another, joint owner with himself, gave the valuable landed property now held by the board, and on which the academy building stands. But his interest in, and his efforts for, the welfare of the academy ceased not with this donation. Always, to the very last, he was its firm and zealous friend, ready to lend his time and labor and influence for its good. As a trustee, he was earnest, faithful, persevering; as treasurer, true to the pecuniary interests of the academy, wise and prudent in his suggestions for the management of its property."

Mr. Choate, his wife, and three daughters made public confession of their faith on the same day, March 4, 1838, and united with the First Congregational Church in Derry, N. H. He was a man of kind and generous impulses and Christian character, a good neighbor and patriotic citizen, and a noble type of manhood.

Mrs. Choate survived her husband after a married life of fifty-five years, and died at the age of eighty-two years. Her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth (Nesmith) Pinkerton, was a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Reid) Nesmith.

Memoranda.

DR. GEORGE CHOATE was for nearly a half century one of the most beloved and distinguished physicians of Salem, Mass. In his youth he studied Latin under the tuition of the late Rev. Dr. William Cogswell, then master of the North District School, in Chebacco, Ipswich, Mass. Afterward he spent a year of study in Dummer Academy, Byfield, and another in Atkinson Academy. He entered Harvard College in 1814, and graduated in the Class of 1818, which numbered eighty-three members, of whom only eight survived Dr. Choate.

After graduating he spent two years as master of the Feoffee's Latin School in Ipswich, studying medicine at the same time with Dr. Thomas Manning. Two years more he passed in the office of Dr. George C. Shattuck, of Boston, and in 1822 he received his medical degree and commenced practice in Salem. Here he always sustained a high rank in his profession and took an active interest in public affairs. He was President of the Essex South District Medical Society and of the Salem Athenaeum for many years. He represented Salem in the General Court, served efficiently as chairman of the School Committee, and was an active member of the City Government in the Board of Aldermen. He joined, in 1825, the Essex Lodge of Free Masons, and became its Master in 1828 and 1829.

Dr. Choate took a lively interest in all local and public affairs and was especially devoted to the cause of education. He was warmly attached to the Church with which he worshipped. He officiated as chairman of the committee at the installation of Rev. Thomas T. Stone, after the manner adopted by the brethren at the installation of Higginson and Skelton in 1629.

Dr. Choate's health having become seriously impaired, he removed, about the year 1867, to Cambridge, where he spent the remainder of his days in retirement. He died, greatly lamented, at the advanced age of eighty-three years. His funeral service was attended in the First Church, Salem, Mass., the Rev. Dr. George W. Briggs officiating, and the burial took place in Harmony Grove Cemetery.

Mrs. Choate survived her lamented husband. She was a woman of superior abilities and character, a devoted wife, and a prudent, industrious, and faithful mother. At eighty years of age she wrote very interesting letters, and retained her faculties to the last. She died at the age of eighty-two years.

Dr. Choate's four sons were all distinguished for their scholarship and excellence of character throughout their school and college life, and possessed those qualities which have led them all to positions of eminence. The daughters were not less worthy and brilliant. The elder died in early womanhood. The younger, the wife of Dr. de Gersdorff, died a few years since.

Mrs. Choate's mother, Mrs. Sarah (Williams) Hodges, was a daughter of Capt. William Williams, a master mariner of Salem, Mass.

Mrs. Choate is mentioned in a local paper, at the time of her death, in a most appreciative manner, as follows:—

"The announcement of the death of Mrs. Susan G. Choate will be read by many here and elsewhere with a feeling of personal loss to them. Her long life of usefulness in this community is known to a large circle, and many persons in sickness and trouble have been cheered and helped by her kind ministrations. During the war her house was always open to receive a sick or wounded soldier, without pay or question as to rank or need. At one time she had as many as twenty-three officers and privates sick or wounded in her house, caring for them, getting her reward only in the love and esteem of the men, and in her own conscience. Her bright and tender manner was always a help to any who came into her own presence.

"She leaves three brothers, Lewis M. Drew, Col. William O. Drew, both of this city, and Hon. Columbus Drew, of Jacksonville, Fla.; also four sons, Warren Choate and George W. Choate, residing here; Dr. Rufus Choate, of Rockville, Md.; C. D. Choate, of Herndon, Va.; also a daughter, Mrs. L. I. Rosenberg."

Memoranda.

CHARLES FAIRFIELD CHOATE was a member of Company K, Twelfth Regiment Maine Volunteers, First Brigade, Second Division, Nineteenth Army Corps. He was wounded at the Battle of Cedar Creek, Va., Oct. 19, 1864, and died Nov. 10, 1864, in the National Hospital, Baltimore, Md., aged twenty-two years, ten months. The above battle was the one of General Sheridan's famous ride. General Early took the Union troops by surprise, and many of the brave soldiers were left dying on the field. Young Choate was robbed and stripped of his clothing by the rebels. They took his pants, drawers, coat, boots, stockings, everything but his shirt. When they pulled his boots off they dragged him around by his feet, swearing and kicking him roughly. He lay on the field from early morning until late at night, naked and bleeding. Had he not been wounded, the exposure must have proved fatal. It was just three years to an hour from the time he left home to his being brought back a lifeless corpse. He was buried "under arms" in his native place, Milltown, Me.

IN MEMORIAM.

Yes, dear Emma, thou hast gone,
And left loved ones thy loss to mourn.
Like the sweetest summer flower
Bright hopes were blasted in an hour.

But thus it is the fairest flower
That e'er is culled 'neath Flora's bowers
Is first to wither first to die,
And leaves us but a parting sigh.

But while its fragrance lingers yet
And memory ne'er its sweet forget,

The spirits of the sainted dead
Keep watchful vigils o'er our heads.

Then let us twine a wreath of love
To wear among the saints above,
Whose flowers of amaranthine bloom
Will shed their fragrance round thy tomb.

'T is hard to part with one so rare,
So young, so lovely, and so fair;
So bright a pearl, so pure a gem,
But God has called. Why weep ye then?

MR. KENDRICK was limited in his early opportunities for an education. He was employed largely on his father's farm until twenty-one years of age. He then felt called of God to preach the Gospel; and after some years of study he was licensed in 1803. In personal appearance he was very commanding, being erect, six feet three inches in height, and well proportioned.

He commenced preaching in Bellingham, Mass., then went to Lansingburg, N. Y., and afterward to Middlebury, Vt. He received the degree of A. M. in 1813 from the University of Vermont, and of D. D. in 1819 from Brown University, R. I.

In 1823 he became a professor in the Theological Department of Madison University, Hamilton, N. Y. In 1836 he was chosen president of the same institution. This office and honor he declined, although for some time he fulfilled the duties of a president.

When elected to the office of President of the University he persistently declined, remarking, with his usual blending of modesty with humor, that he knew of no other ground for the choice they had made of him than that on which Saul was elected to be King in Israel, namely, that he was head and shoulders taller than his brethren.

But there was about the man a certain moral loftiness that gave tone to his every word and act.

Memoranda.

MR. MATTOCKS was a descendant of James Mattocks, one of the first settlers of Boston, Mass., who came in 1634 from Totness, Devonshire, England. The descendants of James Mattocks of Boston have resided largely in Connecticut and Vermont, and have been prominent in professional and public life. There have been among them twenty-three lawyers, judges, and sheriffs, and one member of Congress.

Mr. Mattocks graduated in 1821 from Middlebury College, Vermont. He studied law with his uncle, William Mattocks, Esq., of Danville, Vt., and was admitted to the Bar in 1826. He practised a few years, was elected Judge of Probate in 1836, and held that position eleven years.

He was the cashier of the Bank of Caledonia several years, and of the Lyndon Bank for nearly twenty years, but resigned on account of ill health in 1874.

He was a man of strict integrity, and commanded universal respect. It has been said of him, "He was an exemplary Christian, a courteous gentleman in all his business relations, kind to the poor, an affectionate husband and father, and a worthy citizen."

When eighty-three years of age, under date of June 20, 1885, Mr. Mattocks writes:—

"You ask, where I got the name Bulkley? From my mother's ancestors. I have a record which I copy: 'Peter Bulkley, the Puritan one of the first settlers of Massachusetts, Clergyman. Dr. Edward Bulkley of Bedfordshire, England, came to New England 1658 or 9, Clergyman. Rev. Gershom Bulkley son of Peter and Grace Chetwood married Sarah Chauncey daughter of President Chauncey of Harvard College. Edward his son married Dorothy Prescott of Concord, Charles his son married Mary Sage of Middletown, Conn. . . . Sarah daughter of Charles married Cephas Smith of Shetfield, Conn. . . .' So you perceive, my mother, daughter of my grandfather Cephas Smith and his wife Sarah Bulkley, gave me the name Bulkley. I have also the Bulkeley Coat of Arms. Accept my sincere thanks for your sympathy, and may our God and Savior bless and prosper you.

"Yours,

S. B. MATTOCKS."

The Rev. Peter Bulkeley was the first pastor of the church in Concord, Mass., organized July 5, 1636.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE, tradition says, was a person remarkable for his ready wit. We find in print the following sketch:—

“George G. Choate came, not far from the beginning of the present century, from some place in the county of Essex, in the State of Massachusetts. By trade he was a house-carpenter. He first married a Miss Johnson, a daughter of the last wife of Mr. Ezra Howard, and by her had five daughters, two of whom were the wives of Mr. Samuel Hall, of this place, but who, many years ago, removed to Long Island in the town of Bluehill. Another was the wife of Mr. Thomas Haskell, son of Deacon Joshua Haskell, a master ship-carpenter, who lived here until a few years ago, and then removed to Boston, where he died not long after his removal. He had been married before, and had a family of eight children. His first wife was a daughter of Courtney Babbidge. The remaining daughter of Mr. Choate by his first marriage was Miss Mary Choate, who now resides in Boston. The second wife of Mr. Choate was Miss Betsey, daughter of Mr. Thomas Small, Sr. They had two sons. One was the late Mr. Thomas S. Choate who resided here, and died several years ago. The other was Mr. John Choate, who, when quite a young man, left this place and went to New Orleans, and before the Rebellion commanded a steamer on the Mississippi River. Of the daughters we know nothing, as they did not remain here. Mr. Choate formerly resided in a house near the Town House, which, after his removal from here, was purchased by Jonathan E. Webb, Esq., and removed to the Northwest Harbor. It is now the property of Captain John W. Green. Not far from 1830 Mr. Choate removed to Bluehill, where he resided till his death, which took place not far from 1860. He was a great wit, and many of his expressions are well remembered, both in this place and in Bluehill.”

Vid. Historical Sketch of the Town of Deer Isle, Me., pp. 175, 176.

“Captain Johnson, Mrs. Choate's father, followed the seas. He was born in Scotland. Soon after the birth of Elizabeth, his youngest child, he was three days out on a voyage from Newburyport, Mass., when he was washed overboard and drowned. On receiving this sad intelligence his widow became deranged, and continued so the remainder of her life.” This account was given Sept. 27, 1892, by the second daughter, Miss Mary Choate, who is living, July 14, 1896, in her ninety-fourth year, and expects to go on a picnic next Monday. She resides in the Old Ladies' Home, Boston, Mass.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE was a man of very fine physique, tall, well formed, and handsome; had very dark brown, almost black, hair and eyes, and beautiful teeth. He was a man of considerable mental calibre, cultured and refined; a devoted husband, a kind and indulgent father, a brave soldier, a good churchman, a typical Virginian, a gentleman in the best and highest sense.

His associates were those of the best families of Portsmouth, Va. He was the life of the social circle, and his polished and gentlemanly manner was acknowledged by all. He was perfectly reliable in every department of business and private life, no one hesitating to aid him in any particular, if necessary.

At the age of twenty-one or two he opened business for himself; this, however, did not prove very lucrative, and he was offered a situation in the bank of Portsmouth, which was accepted and retained for several years, but abandoned, as failing health admonished him of a necessary change. Shortly after giving up this position, by the advice of his physician, the late Dr. Thos. Williamson, U. S. N., he purchased a farm pleasantly situated on the Elizabeth River, a few miles from Portsmouth, Va., with the view of being benefited, if not entirely restored to health, by the salt air, together with the frequent drives about the surrounding country. The change proved to be a great benefit, and, doubtless, prolonged his life for quite a number of years, and had the effect of entirely dispelling the sad impression of filling a consumptive's grave. He was hospitable and kind, and all visitors at his house met with not only a joyous welcome, but the warmest demonstrations of affection.

"Mrs. Henrotin is the wife of the well-known Chicago broker, Charles Henrotin. In Chicago she is well known as one of the leaders of the best society. During the World's Fair Mrs. Henrotin gained for herself an international reputation through her efforts in behalf of the woman's branch of the World's Congress Auxilliary, of which she was vice-president. In that capacity her services to the undertaking were invaluable, and to her as much as to any other person is due the great success which crowned the efforts of the ladies in that line. In literary and educational circles Mrs. Henrotin is also prominent. She is the author of several books that have attracted general attention. Notable among her writings is a defence of Chicago society against the attacks of Ward McAllister.

"Chicagoans and other western people here naturally rejoice over Mrs. Henrotin's election. But her triumph is not looked upon as sectional. The lady's own worth, and not the section whence she came, brought to her this signal honor."

MRS. KEZIAH CHOATE was a brave, energetic, and independent woman, devoted to her family, respected by her neighbors, and for her fidelity and worthy service immortalized by one of America's greatest poets. Mr. Samuel T. Pickard, the biographer of Mr. Whittier, says:—

"The following incident illustrates Mr. Whittier's kindness and consideration for those employed by him. His washerwoman, Mrs. Choate, by industry and thrift, had been enabled to build for her family a comfortable house. When it was ready for occupancy there was a house-warming, attended by all the neighbors, who brought substantial tokens of their good-will, including all the furniture needed in her new parlor. Mr. Whittier's hand was to be seen in the whole movement; he was present at the festivity, and made a little speech congratulating Mrs. Choate upon her well-deserved success in life, and said he would read a piece of machine poetry which had been intrusted to him for the occasion. These are the lines, which were, of course, his own composition:—

"Of rights and of wrongs
Let the feminine tongues
Talk on—none forbid it.
Our hostess best knew
What her hands found to do,
Asked no questions, but DID IT.

"Thanks, then, to Kate Choate!
Let the idle take note
What their fingers were made for;
She, cheerful and jolly,
Worked on late and early,
And bought—what she paid for.

"Here the lesson of work,
Which so many folks shirk,
Is so plain all may learn it.
Each brick in this dwelling,
Each timber is telling,
If you want a home, EARN IT.

"Never vainly repining,
Nor begging nor whining,
The morning star twinkles
On no heart that's brighter,
As she makes the world whiter
And smooths out its wrinkles.

"The question of labor
Is solved by our neighbor,
The old riddle guessed out;
The wisdom sore needed,
The truth long unheeded,
Her flat-iron's pressed out.

"So long life to Kate!
May her heirs have to wait
Till they're gray in attendance;
And her flat-iron press on,
Still teaching its lesson
Of brave independence!"

Memoranda.

DR. HENRY A. CHOATE commenced business as a druggist in 1849 in a store under the Revere House, Boston, Mass. The hotel was opened in June, 1847, and about two years later Dr. Choate established himself, where he spent forty years of his life. His sign became one of the old landmarks of the West End. During this period all the business places about him have changed hands, some of them many times, so that there remained no one in the vicinity who was there when he commenced business, and only one man in the Revere House who had been there as long as he, when, Aug. 26, 1889, he retired, and sold out to a syndicate, known since as the "Choate Drug and Chemical Company." This company still continues the business under the old sign of HENRY A. CHOATE.

CHOATE'S DRUG STORE.

Dr. Choate, having closed up his affairs, was intending to visit Europe and take a long rest from active business, but while passing a few days in Swampscott, Mass., by the seaside, he was seized by congestion of the brain, and after a short illness died, on Wednesday, Sept. 11, 1889. The Boston Journal of the next day speaks of him as follows:—

"He was highly respected in all his relations of life, and was regarded an able business man. With friends his disposition was of a warm-hearted, genial character, while his liberality was widely bestowed. His loss, therefore, will be widely felt on personal grounds by many who enjoyed his acquaintance. . . . The connection which Dr. Choate enjoyed with the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company and the Veteran Tigers kept him associated with many of the older citizens of the community, as well as with the younger generations, whose friendship he gained by his pleasant ways. He leaves a widow and three children."

Vid. Boston Journal, Thursday Evening, Sept. 12, 1889.

Dr. Choate's oldest son survived his father but a few years, and died in the prime of manhood.

Mrs. Choate, with her son and daughter, spend much time in travelling, and when in Boston they board at the Parker House.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE, from the fifteenth year of his age, had the burdens and the responsibilities of the oldest son in a large family. He remained upon the farm, caring for his parents until their death at an advanced age. In October, of 1862, he was mustered into the service of his country in Company E of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Maine Volunteers for nine months' service. This regiment was stationed at Chantilly, Va., to guard the Capitol. Mr. Choate was detailed from the ranks to hospital duties, and served the term of his enlistment as hospital steward.

While residing at Naples, Mr. Choate took little part in public affairs, although he served the town as assessor, selectman, and in other offices. Upon his removal to Bridgton, about 1887, he was soon pressed into the service of that town as a member of the board of selectmen, of assessors, of overseers of the poor, and of road commissioners. His active life has made him familiar with the affairs of the town, and his trustworthiness has been recognized in the community as it was recognized in the army.

The old house built by Mr. Choate's grandfather, Ebenezer Choate [140], about 1816, in Bridgton, was burned down on the morning of July 4, 1889. Mr. Choate now occupies the house and farm which belonged to his uncle and father-in-law, Nehemiah Choate [319]. The homestead of his father in Naples, Me., has passed out of the name into other hands, so that this is the only homestead of the olden times in the State which now belongs to this branch of the family.

ISAAC BASSETT CHOATE.

THE region of hills and valleys where Isaac Bassett Choate first saw the light is quite as picturesque and well adapted to the unfolding of genius as the famous "Lake Country," made immortal by the residence of Wordsworth and his literary neighbors. In a piece of word-painting, in every way worthy of the great laureate who dwelt at Rydal Mount, Mr. Choate thus alludes to the home of his boyhood:—

"I have in mind a farmstead 'mongst the hills,
A broken region rich in ponds and rills,
With mountain ranges on the north and west,
And on the south a lonely lake at rest."

He was a frail child, and all his early life was divided between books, for which he had a passionate fondness, and the sick-bed, which gave his parents much anxiety for his future. Because of his constitutional weakness and the isolated situation of the farm, his early opportunities for regular study were few. The method ultimately adopted for testing his fitness for further living was unique in the last degree. In his twenty-second year, when his voice, never too strong, had left him with little prospect of ever returning, the sickly youth was sent, by advice of the physicians, to achieve health or an early grave, on the malarial plains of Kansas, then in the midst of those border conflicts, that may now be regarded as the beginning of the great Civil War. Two years later he was back in Maine, none the worse for his rough experiences, engaged in the heroic endeavor to pursue the trade of a house-joiner. This last experiment was a fortunate one, for it fully admonished the youth, whose endowments of brain had always been so much in excess of brawn, in what direction his true vocation lay. He now turned his attention in good earnest to his books, and in one year had accomplished the work usually allotted to three, entering the Freshman Class of Bowdoin College in the autumn of 1858. Here, however, his old time enemy still continued its relentless pursuit, and he was precluded by ill health from reviewing a single term's study with his class. Nevertheless, when the rank was made up he was found to be among the foremost, and was accorded the highest honors for scholarship.

After graduating, in 1862, Mr. Choate read law in the office of the late Senator Fessenden, and in due time was admitted to the bar, teaching, meanwhile, in the classical departments of the seminaries at Westbrook and Gorham, and in the academies at Yarmouth and Bridgton. Then, for one year, he took charge of the Portland Public Library. After this he filled college professorships at Galesburg, Ill., and Akron, Ohio.

Fifteen or more years ago Mr. Choate took up his permanent residence in Boston, where he has taught many private pupils, and contributed prose and verse to many of the leading periodicals. A book from his pen, entitled "Wells of English," has been received with marked favor by thoughtful readers. In 1895, he published a dainty volume of verse, "With Birds and Flowers." He is a valued contributor to the good old Home Journal, of New York, which was established in 1846, by the poets, Morris and Willis, and wrote one of his best lyrics for the recent "Jubilee" number of that paper. Like all true artists, Mr. Choate lives in the hope of better things yet to be done. Were he more of a Bohemian he might, perhaps, have achieved a more superficial and hasty, but not more enduring, reputation. He has never indulged in any literary buffoonery, nor affected bad English, which nobody speaks, under the pretence of writing "dialect." In short, he has never attempted anything that he did not do well, and the intelligent reader is always sure of entertainment and instruction in the perusal of his pages.

MEMORANDA.

LEANDER CHOATE, ESQ.

MR. CHOATE passed his boyhood days upon his father's farm, which was adjoining that of his grandfather, Ebenezer Choate [140], one of the first settlers.

The educational and social advantages of the town in that day were limited. He attended school only a short term in the winter, and the rest of the year he was kept busy upon the farm. His father had by that thrift and economy characteristic of New England paid for his farm, and maintained his growing family free from debt, when unfortunately his dwelling was burned. The rebuilding of the house involved an expenditure over and above the insurance, so that the father found himself in debt to the amount of two hundred and fifty dollars. This debt the son undertook to pay, upon condition that he be allowed to act for himself. From that time he began his business career as a boy of about seventeen years of age negotiating for a man's work and a man's pay upon a farm. The debt was paid in full; but at twenty years of age, upon recovery from a long illness, the destined favorite of Fortune was without a dollar.

At the age of twenty-one Leander Choate entered the employ of Choate and Tolman, dealers in wood, coal, and lumber, at Lynn, Mass. The senior member of this firm was Alden Choate, his uncle. He remained in this employment for a year and a half, when he purchased a package express route between Boston and Charlestown. This business was conducted with a fair degree of success.

In 1857 Choate and Tolman determined to remove to the West. Flattering offers induced Leander Choate to accompany them. They located at Oshkosh, Wis., and engaged in the lumber trade. This has continued to be the leading interest of the subject of this sketch. From the Wisconsin volume of the "Representative Men of the United States," we quote some account of the business conducted by Mr. Choate in that State:—

"Choate and Tolman purchased the interests of Danforth and Carter, of the lumber firm of Bray, Danforth and Carter, and the business was conducted under the name of Bray, Tolman and Company until 1862. Leander Choate was an employé of this firm, and he superintended their operations in the woods. In 1862 Mr. Matt. Bray and Leander Choate bought out the firm of Bray, Tolman and Company, and established the firm of Bray and Choate. Mr. Choate had no money then, but his business ability, even at that time, was appreciated. The father of Matt. Bray assisted the young men, and they entered upon a partnership which has continued up to the present time, and which death alone can sever. Mr. Choate was young, ambitious, and energetic. The new firm was successful from the outset. At various times they owned mills on the Oconto and the Wisconsin rivers. In 1890 the business became known as the Oshkosh Log and Lumber Company, and was incorporated with a capital of $500,000. Of this corporation Mr. Choate is president. The company operates mills in the northern peninsula of Michigan, and cuts about forty million feet a year. Mr. Choate is also president of the Lake Shore Lumber Company, of Tomahawk Lake, Wis., which cuts twelve million feet a year. In addition to the above lumber companies, he has an interest in the firm of Bray, Choate and Company, which also cuts about twelve million feet a year. Mr. Choate is also vice-president of the Bray and Choate Land Company, which operates extensively in pine lands, and owns about one hundred and fifty million feet of standing timber in the Northwest."

One of the largest and best equipped of all the lumber mills in the Northwest is that which is located at Choate, Mich.

"Mr. Choate has also become conspicuous as a financier. He is now vice-president of the First National Bank of Oshkosh; president of the First National Bank of Rhineland, which is capitalized for $50,000, and has a surplus of $10,000. He was formerly president of the First National Bank of Merrill, of which Bray and Choate are the largest stockholders. He is also a director of the First National Bank of Marshfield, Wis. He was for some time identified with the water-works system of Oshkosh, and was also one of the organizers of the street railway."

It is evident enough that Leander Choate has had business upon his hands that would keep almost anyone out of practical politics. He has served the city two years as alderman, and, in 1882, he was the Republican candidate for mayor. Although he failed of an election, it is to be noted that the usual Democratic majority was materially reduced by his candidacy.

"Mr. Choate owes the position which he now holds in the community entirely to his own efforts. He has confined himself to legitimate business transactions, has avoided speculation, and the fortune which he has accumulated is but the natural result of sound business principles and steady application. As a man of business no citizen of Oshkosh stands higher. As a citizen he is public spirited and is always in sympathy with those movements that tend to increase the prosperity of the city."

Mrs. Choate, a woman of most excellent qualities of mind and heart, has ever been an inspiration and help to her husband, making home attractive, restful, and interesting, and in times of heavy bereavement, lighting up the darkness by her presence and words of consolation. Few homes have been more sadly stricken with sorrows.

The eldest of their five children, a little daughter, died in early childhood. George, a promising boy of nearly ten years of age, was drowned in the Manistee River, Manistee, Mich. The other three children followed each other in rapid succession.

The youngest of the family, the idol of the home, a girl of sweet disposition, and full of affectionate thoughts and deeds, ever busying herself with the welfare and happiness of others, after a wasting illness, made beautiful by her cheerful submission, passed out of this life on the eve of her tenth birthday, and six weeks later the only surviving son, a young man of noble qualities, whose business abilities already had appeared to be of high order, was taken suddenly ill, and died at the age of twenty-four years. And then the only remaining child, a girl of thirteen years, of sweet promise and beauty, was called away. So that within a period of hardly more than six months these stricken parents followed their third and last child to burial. Their children all gone, what a desolation of the fondest hopes!

into other hands, and subsequently the house was burned: but the trees remain, holding their graceful branches up against the sky, and are still objects of great interest to the few survivors of the family.

ANCESTRAL TREES.

THE "Ancestral Trees" are four elms that were planted by the four oldest children of Ebenezer and Elizabeth Choate. Lois, Elizabeth, Ebenezer and Nehemiah, on the homestead at Bridgton, in the early years of this century. They are shown here as they were seen from the house. They are not in a line, for they were planted in pairs on opposite sides of a log fence which at that time separated the enclosure of the buildings from the fields and pastures of the farm. The house and the barns stood several rods apart, and the path between them, worn by the feet of three generations, during seventy-five years, was shaded by these elms.

"She was bright and active, pleasant in conversation, and her departure will be a great sorrow to the son, who was devoted and kind to the good mother whom he so dearly cherished. Few women have lived in our midst with more excellent traits of character than she possessed. Through her long life her whole thought has been to aid and counsel those in trouble or distress; in sickness she was always ready to do her part in making the patients' burdens lighter. Hers was a truly Christian life, which spoke in deeds as well as words. She never grew old, so that very many hearts are sad that no more on earth can they hold sweet converse with her. She was devoted to her church, the First Parish, where she always exerted an influence for good."

MR. CHOATE, it is said, "lived beloved and died lamented." In very early life he was an earnest worker in the Methodist Church. So much confidence was placed in him that when but eighteen years old he was a class leader in the church. Having throughout his brief life witnessed a good confession he left this world in the fullest expectation of an eternal home in Heaven.

Mr. Choate, although he died in early manhood, at the age of only twenty-eight years, left many most interesting evidences of the excellent qualities of both his head and his heart. His neighbors, and those who knew him, never weary of recounting his deeds of skill and goodness. His educational advantages, when the country was so new, and almost a wilderness, must have been very limited, but in some way he managed to obtain a remarkable knowledge of mathematics, and won the honor of erecting the first machinery for grinding and sawing in that section of the country. His ready ingenuity enabled him to manufacture his own tools as he wanted them for use. He was the first man within a radius of a hundred miles to advocate temperance and organize a temperance society. His short life was well devoted to industrial improvements and the moral elevation of his fellowmen.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE remarks upon the Choate family as follows:—

"The Choate family are a mixture of English, French, and Dutch, and the three races crop out in all the families. Hon. Rufus Choate and his brother David were more French than the natives. Solomon Choate's sons, Solomon and Benjamin, were also French, while Lewis, Asa, and Charles were short, thick Dutchmen. My sister Lydia was a good Frenchwoman, brother Edmund a little that way, while Lewis, Mary, and myself are good stolid, stupid Dutch chunks. I have often wished the Dutch left out.

"My mother was a schoolmate of Rufus, and my father took him to college when he entered; that makes us quite near relations. David was my school-teacher, and I am surprised to see how nearly he came, fifty years since, to the most advanced teaching of the present day. And I have no doubt that the large number of professional men who have gone out from that small, old-fashioned town, Essex, in proportion to its population, is largely due to his influence, the inspiration he imparted to them. There were Judge Perkins, Judge Choate, Rev. Mr. Mears, Rev. Mr. Burnham, Rev. Mr. Norton, Professor Choate, Professor Crowell, besides many more I do not know. All out of a small unattractive town with little or no culture."

Mr. Choate is a very fine looking man, and when asked to allow his likeness to appear in this book, replied:—

"An old writer has said: 'Better that a statue should not be raised than that people should ask, "For whom? And why?"' My life has been simple and quiet. Never held an office of any kind in state or church, and don't wish for one. That, so far as I know, is my only distinction. So you will at once see the reason why I could not have an engraving put in the history."

Memoranda.

MR. SHAW, while brought up to business and occupied with it, has developed a remarkable passion for literature and poetry. Burns, Byron, Moore, Wordsworth, and Whittier being his favorite authors. He has betrayed no small literary talent and ability as a writer. He commenced writing snatches of poetry when but fifteen years of age, and has continued to write verse and brief articles for the local press and other publications.

Mr. Shaw published, a few years since, a small volume of miscellaneous poems entitled, "In Many Moods," dedicated to his mother, Harriet Nowell Shaw. Concerning this book of poems, Mr. Whittier wrote to Mr. Shaw, in 1885, as follows:—

"I am glad to get thy pretty volume. It gives me the feeling of broader horizons and mountain presence. I like the Proem exceedingly, and scattered through the book are fine thoughts. Yet I am sure that years and patient brooding over thy themes will enable thee to crowd thy verses with deeper and clearer meanings. Thy rhythm is very nearly perfect, and the feeling, as the painter would say, is true and genuine, and there is a sweet and delicate confession of thy love for Nature, which promises much. 'The Seekers' pleases me, as it expresses so musically what I have often felt among the hills."

Mr. Shaw published, in 1893, a sketch of his lamented father, Benjamin Franklin Shaw, the inventor of the first Circular Jacquard Stocking Loom for producing a seamless stocking, and the founder of the Shaw Knit Stocking industry, who died Dec. 11, 1890. He has been characterized as "one of the most extraordinary men of our day, and one of the greatest, if not the most celebrated, inventors of the United States." The Shaw Knit Stocking Loom is a most complex and mysterious piece of delicate machinery. For interesting mention of Mr. Benjamin F. Shaw,

Vid. Boston Evening Journal, Dec. 12, 1890, and

An Outline by His Son, Ralph H. Shaw, pp. 1-34.

"Mr. Shaw is said to be a delightful man of a most generous nature by those who have been friends of several years' standing." He has been called a rising poet. His "In Many Moods" has given him a favorable mention among men of literary eminence and poetic taste. Mr. Shaw now (1896) edits and publishes a monthly magazine called "The Middlesex Hearthstone," of which the few numbers issued are highly commended.

Mrs. Shaw graduated in 1878, with honors, from the Lowell High School, receiving a medal for her high rank as a scholar.

They have had five children. The youngest, a little girl of four years, was instantly killed by an electric car, but the motorman, it is said, was in no way to blame for the sad accident.

Memoranda.

MR. CLARK died before the commencement of the late War for the Union. His only son served in the Union Army, and his daughters married Union soldiers.

The following sketch of Judge Blake is copied from a Montana paper of twenty years ago:—

HON. HENRY NICHOLS BLAKE.

HENRY NICHOLS BLAKE was born in Boston, Mass., on June 5, 1838. The middle name is the maiden name of his mother. He graduated in the Dorchester High School in 1856, and entered the law department of Harvard University, where he graduated in 1858, with the degree of LL. B. He was admitted to practice law, at Boston, in 1859.

In April, 1861, Mr. Blake enlisted in Company K, Eleventh Massachusetts Volunteers, and was mustered into the service of the United States as a sergeant; was wounded in the Battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861; appointed first sergeant in August, 1861, and served with the Army of the Potomac at the sieges of Yorktown and Richmond. Upon the recommendation of Colonel Blaisdell and General Grover, he was promoted to be second lieutenant in May, 1862. Upon the commission is this endorsement:—

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, BOSTON, May 15, 1862.

Sergeant Henry N. Blake is herein promoted to second lieutenancy, for "brave and meritorious conduct in the action of the 5th of May, 1862, near Williamsburg, Va."

By direction of the Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

WILLIAM BROWN, Asst. Adjt.-Gen., Mass.

He was with the regiment at the battles of Fair Oaks, Savage's Station, Glendale, Malvern Hill, Bristow Station, Second Bull Run, Chantilly, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, The Wilderness, and Spottsylvania Court House, and was engaged in a number of skirmishes besides these battles. He was promoted to be first lieutenant Sept. 11, 1862, and was commissioned as captain April 26, 1864. He was severely wounded in the right thigh at Spottsylvania, May 12, 1864, the bullet passing within one eighth of an inch of the femoral artery. From the effects of this wound he was disabled about four months, and was mustered out of the service with his regiment in June, 1864.

Captain Blake left Boston for Montana in April, 1866, and has resided in Virginia City since July of that year. He edited the Montana Post from August, 1866, till Jan. 1, 1867, when he entered upon the practice of the law. He served with the Montana Militia, which was raised to fight the Indians on the Yellowstone, in May, June, and July, 1867; was commissioned as colonel by General Meagher, Acting Governor, May 21, 1867. On April 22, 1869, he was appointed United States Attorney for Montana, by President Grant, which office he resigned Feb. 4, 1871, and accepted from Governor Potts the appointment of District Attorney, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. W. L. McMath; was elected to the same office by the people of the First Judicial District for the full term of two years; was appointed Reporter of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of this Territory in January, 1872, and prepared the first volume of the Montana Reports. At the August election in 1874, he was elected a member of the House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly, receiving a larger majority than any other officer elected at that time. On July 30, 1875, he was commissioned as Associate Justice for Montana Territory, vice Hon. F. G. Servis, resigned, the appointment to take effect on the 10th inst. He entered upon the discharge of his judicial duties on the 18th inst. He has been engaged in the practice of law in this territory since January, 1867, and has been editor of the Montanian from June, 1874, until the present month, August, 1875.

Since the subject of our sketch has resided in Montana he has retained the temperate habits he acquired in his eastern home, and does not use either tobacco or liquors. He possesses to the fullest extent the esteem and confidence of this community. His reputation for honesty and integrity has never been questioned by those who know him, and he is fully endorsed by the lawyers and people of his district for the honorable position which he now occupies. In politics he has always been Republican, and was President of the Republican Territorial Convention at Helena in June, 1874. Political opponents have found in him a considerate but unflinching adversary, and have always given him credit for an earnest and sincere zeal for the public welfare. The Montanian corps regret to part from him as from a brother, and its readers will miss his vigorous and pithy editorials from its columns. We believe, however, that in his new position he will maintain the purity and dignity of the bench and the bar, and that the mantle of justice could not have fallen upon worthier shoulders; and in this belief, with the consoling thought (somewhat hackneyed, it is true) that our loss is his gain, we wish him every success in his new field of usefulness. Vid. Montanian, Aug. 26, 1875.

A later notice of Judge Blake mentions that he was elected in 1874, 1880, 1882, and 1886, a member of the House of Representatives of the Legislative Assembly; appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory in August, 1875, and served until February, 1880. He was commissioned Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the Territory of Montana March 23, 1889, and entered upon the duties of the office. He was nominated by acclamation in the Republican Convention for the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Montana, and elected by the people in October, 1889. The Territory was admitted as a State into the Union Nov. 8, 1889, when Judge Blake took his official oath. In 1892 he was renominated by acclamation in the Republican State Convention, but defeated in the election by a coalition of the Democrats and Populists, and retired from the office Jan. 2, 1893. The Governor of Montana appointed Judge Blake, Jan. 17, 1895, State District Judge of the First Judicial District, which position he still fills.

Judge Blake, in person, is of medium height, dignified and gentlemanly in manner; he has black eyes, and his hair and beard are slightly gray; a man of pleasing appearance and of genial, social qualities. He married, in 1870, Miss Clark, of Boston, Mass. She was born Feb. 13, 1846, in Townsend Harbor, Mass.

Mrs. Blake comes of one of the oldest and most illustrious families of the old Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Constantine Choate, her great-grandfather, was of the same lineage as the late Hon. Rufus Choate, of Boston, and Hon. Joseph H. Choate, now of New York City. She was educated in Boston, and is an accomplished woman, of dignified and commanding appearance. They have been citizens of Montana for many years and have an extended acquaintance all over the State. They are pleasantly situated in apartments in the Grandon Block, corner of Sixth Avenue and Warren Street.

They have had three children, viz., Mary Wiley, b. Oct. 17, 1870, in Virginia City, Mont.; d. Nov. 4, 1872. Bessie Maria, b. June 19, 1874, in Boston, Mass. Nellie Annie, b. Feb. 20, 1876, in Virginia City, Mont.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE graduated from Bowdoin College, Maine; read law with Hon. John Reed, of Yarmouth, Mass., and with Hon. Rufus Choate, of Boston, Mass., where he commenced practice in 1839, and had an office while he lived.

Mr. Choate had his residence, subsequent to 1842, in Beverly, Mass. He was elected State senator, in 1866, from Essex County.

In making the announcement of his death a Boston paper says:—

“Mr. Frederick W. Choate, a lawyer and leading citizen of Beverly, died this morning after an illness of about a week with pneumonia. He had been educated at Bowdoin College, and was about seventy-five years of age. In 1852 and 1853 he engaged in the whaling business, and owned at one time a fleet of seven or eight vessels.—the only fleet that ever engaged in the business from Beverly. The business was very profitable, and he rapidly made a fortune. In 1867 he disposed of the law of his vessels and retired, although giving more or less attention to his law practice until within a few years. Through investments he lost a portion of his fortune, and at the great Boston fire $60,000 was swept away. He was one of the founders of the Essex Congregational Church.”

Vid. The Boston Evening Journal, April 4, 1891.

WILLIAM CHOATE, the only son of Mr. Choate who lived to manhood, graduated from the Beverly High School in 1876, from the Boston Latin School in 1877, and in 1881 from Harvard College. After graduation he studied law, and was Principal of the High School in Shrewsbury, Mass., from Jan. 1, 1882, to the close of the school year. The following year he was Principal of the High School in Holliston, Mass.

Mr. Choate in July, 1885, was admitted to the Suffolk Bar, and in September, 1885, opened an office at No. 10 Tremont Street, Boston. He formed a partnership, in April, 1887, with Henry F. May, Esq., a college classmate, for the general practice of the law, at No. 54 Devonshire Street, Boston. Later Mr. May removed to Denver, Col., and the partnership was dissolved.

Mr. Choate was for four years a member of the School Committee of Beverly, Mass., but owing to ill health he resigned, July 1, 1891. A few months later, under date Feb. 17, 1892, there appeared the following sad announcement:—

"Word was received in Beverly yesterday of the death from consumption of William Choate, which occurred at St. Luke's Hospital in New York City. He was thirty years of age, and a son of the late Frederick W. Choate. Mr. Choate was a lawyer with a large practice, and was associated with William F. Dana of Boston, under the firm name of Choate & Dana. He was born in Beverly, attended the Boston Latin School, and graduated at Harvard in 1881. He read law in the office of his father in Boston, and was a member of both the Essex and the Suffolk Bar Associations.

"He was always identified with the best interests of Beverly. He served on the School Committee for several years, and was the principal mover in the formation of the Beverly Co-operative Bank. His health began to fail about a year ago, and he went to Denver, Col., and Southern Pines, N. C. He was on his way to the Bermudas when he was taken sick in New York. The School Committee, at a meeting last evening, passed appropriate resolutions in reference to Mr. Choate's death."

MRS. MARY AMELIA (CHOATE) COX.

MRS. COX wrote the following poem, entitled —

THE LITTLE MISTRESS OF THE HOUSE.

The guests have come! all silent have they waited,
 Entering the noiseless hush with silent bows.
 They linger for her coming, sore belated —
 Where is the little mistress of the house?

She is not wont to leave her friends so lonely,
 That come too seldom, as she gayly vows;
 Yet they are here, and wait and wait her pleasure only —
 Where is the little mistress of the house?

She cannot be far off — perhaps but sleeping;
 Doubtless at these low calls she would arouse:
 Why do they summon her alone with weeping?
 Where is the little mistress of the house?

The portraits stare behind their veiling covers,
 The dust is in the melancholy room;
 Upon the air a ghastly silence hovers:
 Within the threshold, loneliness and gloom.

Cold, dark and desolate, the place without her,
 Wanting her gentle smile as each allows;
 She bears a sunbeam light and warmth about her —
 Where is the little mistress of the house?

The curtains fall, undraped by her slight fingers;
 Behind the wainscot gnaws a secret mouse;
 Her treasures need her care, but still she lingers —
 Where is the little mistress of the house?

Alas! there was a rumor and a whisper
 Threading the busy town this many days;
 The youngest baby here, a tiny lisper,
 Can falter forth the reason why she stays.

Why care and love, the tenderest and sincerest,
 Have failed to shield and guard her fair young head!
 Why she has fled from all she loved the dearest —
 For there has been a rumor she is dead.

Throw wide the doors! Whiten the gloomy portal,
Where her small feet fell light as falling snow.
They bear her in, the mortal made immortal!
She comes again, but heavily and slow.

O empty shell! O beautiful, frail prison!
Cold, white, and vacant, tenantless and dumb,
For such poor clay as this has Christ arisen,
For such as this he shall in glory come.

But in the calm indifference to our sorrow,
In the sharp anguish of her parting breath,
In the dark gulf that hides her from to-morrow,
Thou hast the victory, grave! thy sting, O Death!

Yet shall she walk so fair that we who knew her
Would pale before the glory of her brows:
Nor in the radiant beauty dare to woo her
To be again the mistress of the house.

LESLIE WALTER.

It has been stated that a volume of Mrs. Cox's poems was published in Boston some years ago.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE spent his boyhood and school days at "Riverside," Montebello, Ill., on his father's farm, which occupied a bluff overlooking the Mississippi River and a vast extent of country reaching into three States. At eighteen years of age he commenced teaching school, having on application received a certificate attesting his qualifications from the School Board. Having taught two winter terms, spending the intervening summer as a clerk in a country hotel in Iowa, he entered, as a student of law, the office of Hon. Robert H. Gilmore, Keokuk, Iowa.

Mr. Choate completed his legal studies and was admitted, in the fall of 1865, to the bar of both the State and the United States Courts. In October of that year he settled in Memphis, Tenn., and entered upon the practice of his profession. He was also counsel for general assignee of bankruptcy, with some six hundred cases in charge, and Assistant United States District Attorney.

At the age of twenty-seven years he married the daughter of a Georgia planter, Adam Ragland, a man of some local prominence, and a descendant of the Welsh family that occupied the Ragland, now Raglan, Castle, long noted as a place of refuge for the unfortunate sovereigns of England in squally times.

Mr. Choate, in 1872, removed to Atlanta, Ga., and became the General Agent for the Georgia Equitable Life Insurance Company. This position he resigned, in 1874, and became connected with the Law Book publishing house of Soule, Thomas, and Wentworth, of St. Louis, Mo. During this engagement he published several articles on legal subjects, also some important papers on taxation.

In 1877, he removed to Tallahassee, Fla., and has continued to the present time a resident of that State. He engaged somewhat in the real estate business, but journalism has been and still is his permanent employment. He has been the editor of different papers and publications during the last twenty years. Among these may be named the Florida Immigrant, the Florida Mirror, the Tallahassee Floridian, the Seville Independent, the Brooksville Register, the Monthly Bulletin, the Tallahassian, the Daily News, and he is at present, in 1896, the popular editorial writer for the Daily Citizen. Jacksonville, Fla.

Mr. Choate, in 1884, prepared and published for the Florida railroads several illustrated books on Florida, and, in 1889, he prepared and published a "Digest of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of Florida," from its organization to the June term in 1888. This work was highly commended by Hon. W. B. Lamar, Attorney General, and by Hon. George P. Raney, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Florida.

Mr. Choate has been brought forward, recently, by many of the leading papers of the State as a suitable candidate for the office of Attorney General. He is considered a man eminently qualified for the position. His legal knowledge and his commanding abilities are such as would grace that high office.

DAVID CHOATE, M. D.

DAVID CHOATE was educated in the schools of his native town and in Phillips Academy, Andover, preparatory to his medical studies. He commenced the study of his profession with Prof. Dixi Crosby, M. D., of the Dartmouth Medical College, and subsequently entered the Harvard Medical School, from which he graduated. After completing his studies at the Harvard Medical School in 1854, he commenced practice in Hamilton, and soon opened an office in Topsfield, but in 1857 he removed to the neighboring city of Salem, where for many years he has had a very extensive practice, and by his kindness, his professional skill and fidelity, he has gained a strong hold upon and a warm place in the hearts of those in whose families he has visited. Dr. Choate is a most indefatigable worker, and cheerfully responds to many calls, day or night, when he knows there will be no financial remuneration. He is known as the "Beloved Physician."

Dr. Choate gives himself much to study, and has a wide range of reading and information. There are but few men in Essex County so well informed on current and missionary topics. As a Bible student he is proficient, being familiar with the Greek New Testament and well up in the latest results of Biblical criticism and theological speculations. His written papers, whenever he can be persuaded to give them in public, are replete with facts and well-considered conclusions.

Dr. Choate is a member of the Essex South District Medical Society, his contributions to which are much valued. He is also a member of the Essex Congregational Club and a constant attendant at its meetings. For thirty-four years he has been a deacon of the Tabernacle Congregational Church of Salem, and a helpful and much-valued worker in its various departments of Christian service. In 1886 he made an extended European trip, from which he returned much benefited in health and enriched by wide observation and travel.

Dr. Choate, during the War for the Union, was examining surgeon for volunteers and drafted men, and from 1863 to 1869, examining surgeon for pensions. He was on the staff of the Salem Hospital from its organization in 1873, for fourteen years. He has served on the School Board of Salem, been superintendent of the Tabernacle Church Sunday school, and in many ways contributed a valuable service to the public, besides rendering an eminent service in his profession.

He is a man of great modesty and retiring manners, but of sterling qualities of mind and heart.

Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE is the proprietor of the ancient homestead of Thomas Choate [6], on Choate Island. This place has always remained in the Choate name, and in the family descendants of Thomas Choate. Here were born, among others, John Choate, the Commoner, Stephen Choate, the Councillor, and Rufus Choate, the Advocate, each eminent among the most eminent men of his time. Vid. pp. 29-39, 58-61, 199-208.

Mr. Choate occupies in summer the same house which his great-great-grandfather, Francis Choate [33], built in 1725, and under his management the fertile acres of his ancestors yield their annual stipend of farm products.

He bears the name of his distinguished uncle with a graceful modesty, and with no small degree of the same appreciation of the beautiful and suggestive in nature about him. His Island home is endeared to him by its rich legacy of ancestral associations, by its unchanged and impressive outlook upon land and sea, and by its volume of inspirations to a mind quick to perceive, and on the alert to appropriate the wealth of suggestion so lavishly scattered on every hand. Mr. Choate was disappointed in his collegiate course, for which in early life he was preparing, by the failure of his eyes, and was compelled to abandon his books altogether. He gave himself to farming and out-of-door life. He has been called to fill important offices in the town, is prominent in the church, holding the office of a Deacon, and commands the confidence and esteem of all who know him. He is the worthy successor of his honored father, and well represents the best qualities of character in the Choate race.

MR. CHOATE graduated, in 1870, from Amherst College, and from Union Theological Seminary in 1875. He was ordained and installed in September of the same year, as pastor of the Franklin Street Congregational Church, in Manchester, N. H.

Mr. Choate resigned this pastorate and was installed over a Presbyterian Church, October, 1880, in Irvington, on the Hudson, N. Y., where he labored seven or eight years, when he was called to and installed, Oct. 25, 1888, over the Second Congregational Church in Greenwich, Conn. In 1891, he was elected Third Secretary of the American Home Missionary Society, having his office in New York City, which position he now holds. His election was spoken of as follows:—

"With peculiar satisfaction we announce the election of the Rev. Washington Choate, of Greenwich, Ct., as Third Secretary of this Society, and his cordial acceptance of the position. . . ."

"In his experience as a member of the Executive Committee, he has become practically familiar with the work, and has at the same time evinced peculiar fitness for the important position to which he has now been spontaneously and unanimously chosen by his fellow members. He expects to enter upon his new duties about the middle of August."

Mr. Choate, during the five years of service in this responsible secretaryship, has met most fully the high expectations entertained, and is still earnestly engaged in this important work.

Memoranda.

MR. BELL graduated with honor in 1844 from Dartmouth College. He read law with his father, the Hon. Joseph Bell, for a long time one of the most distinguished lawyers in New Hampshire. He commenced practice, and pursued his profession successfully until he heard the call from Fort Sumter to enter the service of his country, to which he at once responded.

When General Butler went to New Orleans Mr. Bell was selected as a member of his staff, and proved himself a very valuable officer. His knowledge of law, the facility with which he could meet unexpected exigencies, his integrity, his ready decision and firmness, gave him at once a prominence, and almost immediately he was promoted to the responsible place of Provost Judge, which then included the most important judicial functions of the State. He commanded the highest respect of the ablest lawyers of the city. When he held his first court, to test his quality, they asked him under what code he proposed to practice. He replied, "Mainly under natural law and general orders."

Mr. Bell, during General Butler's stay in New Orleans, administered justice with such ability and evident fairness that he was universally respected and honored. He went with General Butler to Norfolk, Va., and while presiding over an important trial he was struck with a partial paralysis, which so shattered his health that he was ever after an invalid until his death.

Memoranda.

REV. CHRISTOPHER CUSHING, D. D.

MR. CUSHING was a descendant of Puritan ancestors, who came to America in 1638 and settled in Scituate, Mass. The old homestead in which he was born has been in the family nearly two hundred years.

At the age of seventeen years he came to Boston and was engaged as an apprentice to a house builder. A few weeks afterwards he was converted under the ministry of Rev. Charles Fitch of the Marlboro Chapel Church. He at once formed the purpose of entering the ministry, but took six months to consider the subject, on the request of friends. He then went to Pinkerton Academy, in Derry, N. H., and prepared for college. He continued his studies, graduating at Yale College in 1844, and Andover Theological Seminary in 1847. He commenced his ministerial career by being ordained, Feb. 27, 1849, as first pastor of the Edwards Church, in Boston, a promising city missionary enterprise in a small hall at the corner of Causeway and Lowell streets. This prospered so much under his wise and faithful pastorate, that in a couple of years a church edifice became essential to its further healthy development. This, however, was found to be impracticable, and he resigned April 23, 1851.

Mr. Cushing was installed at North Brookfield, Sept. 17, following, where he remained sixteen years. His pastorate here was remarkably successful. His church enjoyed several revivals, in one of which one hundred new members were received. He was successful not only in spiritual ministrations, but realized unusual general usefulness, even his ability as a business man becoming so recognized that his parishioners were accustomed to consult him freely upon their secular affairs. He was also largely instrumental in building up the fine Appleton Library there. He left North Brookfield, to the great regret of his people, in May, 1867, to become a secretary of the American Congregational Union, in which he was associated with Dr. Ray Palmer, a position which he efficiently held for ten years.

Mr. Cushing, in 1868, also became associated with Drs. Quint and Langworthy in the editorship of the Congregational Quarterly, which was then commencing its tenth volume. At the beginning of 1875 he became sole proprietor and editor, so remaining until, in his failing health, it was discontinued at the close of its twentieth volume in October, 1878. As a trustee and one of the overseers of the charity fund of Amherst College, Dr. Cushing performed efficient and valuable service, and his last work was the preparation of an excellent report on this subject. His last official position was that of Treasurer of the Massachusetts Home Missionary Society. This position he held only about six months when he was stricken with the disease which soon brought him to the brink of the grave, and though he afterwards rallied in a measure, finally terminated his life, Oct. 23, 1881.

His funeral was held at his late residence in Cambridge, on Tuesday, Oct. 25. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Hoyt, of the First Church, Cambridgeport, of which the deceased was a member; Dr. Alexander McKenzie assisted, speaking eloquently of Dr. Cushing's character and work.

He was always a firm and consistent advocate of gospel temperance and anti-slavery, and never flinched from following his convictions, although sometimes seeing the time when such convictions were costly. He received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Amherst College at its Commencement of 1871. He visited Europe in 1865.

Dr. Cushing was eminently New England in his tastes and peculiarities, and a faithful lover of the ancient polity, and the faith and ways of our fathers. He had a remarkably clear perception, a fine memory, and a passion for accuracy; a combination of qualities which sometimes made him formidable as an antagonist. As a preacher he was singularly exact and definite in statement, and conspicuously logical in the development of his thought; relying more upon straightforward common sense appeals to the reason and the conscience, than upon illustrative or hortatory rhetoric. He loved biography and facts, and to study the ways of God in the lives of good men, and as historiographer for the Andover Alumni, and for the Congregational Club, he lovingly did efficient and valuable service.

Dr. Cushing was a laborious investigator, methodical writer, an instructive preacher, a sympathetic pastor, public spirited and outspoken, a sharp critic of men and books, business-like in piety, fond of doctrines, facts, and figures, and brimful of all the news afloat in the community, church, and ministry. He was a man of noble ambitions, of intense devotion to truth and righteousness, of fidelity in friendships, and of amazing patience in suffering. He passed through great bereavements, as well as bodily sufferings and professional trials, but was heroic in them all. He was cast in the mould of the older generations, but in the true catholicity of grace widened and ripened his type by a growing participation in that which is the common inheritance of all saints.

Christopher Choate Cushing, the only surviving son of Dr. Cushing, a young man of great promise, died in his twenty-first year, in Cambridge, Mass.

Mary Frances Cushing, the only daughter, and the only survivor of the family, married Rev. Mr. Haynes, an Episcopal clergyman. He was a son of Harrison P. and Elizabeth O. (Johnson) Haynes, born Aug. 23, 1849, in Alexandria, N. H. Mr. Haynes graduated in the Class of 1873 from Harvard College, and in 1877 from the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass. He was Rector of Trinity Church, Tilton, N. H., 1877-8; Principal of Jarvis Hall, school for boys, Denver, Col., 1878-82, officiating at Trinity Memorial Church, Denver, during a part of this time, and subsequently, 1882-3, at St. Luke's, Fort Collins, Col.; Rector of Trinity Church, Tilton, N. H. (second time), 1883-4; assistant minister at St. Paul's Church, Boston, 1884-5; in charge of All Saints' Church, Littleton, N. H., 1885-6; studied Semitic languages in Graduates Department of Harvard University, 1886-8; became Rector of St. Peter's Church, Cambridge, Mass., in September, 1888.

Memoranda.

HON. GEORGE FRANCIS CHOATE.

GEORGE FRANCIS CHOATE was only eight years of age when his father died, so that he was brought up by his mother, who was a woman of strong character, and of considerable literary attainments. From her he inherited that firmness and uprightness of character which always distinguished him, and by her was fostered the natural predilection for literature with which he was born. Soon after his father's death young Choate was sent away from home to school, first to Topsfield, and then to Dummer Academy, in Byfield, where he fitted for college under the celebrated Nehemiah Cleveland, LL. D. (Vid. p. 28.) He entered Bowdoin College, and graduated in the Class of 1843. At college he was noted for the same quiet, studious ways as in after life. After graduation he taught school for a year, and then entered the law office of the Hon. Jonathan C. Perkins, Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, as a student. On his admission to the Essex County Bar he formed a law partnership with Hon. William D. Northend, of Salem, Mass., a school and college classmate, which continued until 1858. In that year he was appointed Judge of Probate and Insolvency for Essex County by Gov. Nathaniel P. Banks, and in this office he continued until the time of his death.

The manner in which Judge Choate discharged the various and complex duties of his office during the thirty years he occupied the bench won for him a judicial reputation of the highest order. He had rare insight into the true merits of a cause, and the ability to make it clear to others.

His mind was eminently judicial, and it seemed impossible for him to consider one side of a case alone. Calm and dispassionate, he presided over his court with the utmost self-possession, and his rulings were strictly impartial. His patience was of the kind that never wearies, and no matter what the length of the trial he showed the same close and exact attention to the end.

His knowledge of law was extensive and thorough, and was freely given in aid of his brother lawyers. His conduct of cases was such that almost invariably it was clear to both parties why the decision must be as it was, and however the loser might feel, he always was impressed with the idea that justice according to the law had been rendered. Many cases were referred to him by individuals, and many were sent down to him from the courts, and such was the estimation in which his judgment was held that it was very unusual for his decisions to be either reversed by the courts or objected to by the parties concerned.

Political life he was averse to, and he never held municipal office save for his long and valuable service on the school committees of the city.

For some years he was treasurer of the Newburyport Railroad before its absorption by the Boston and Maine.

Judge Choate was a reserved man and many thought him cold and unsympathetic, but to his intimates he was one of the most warm-hearted and tender of men. He was a devoted husband and father, and always seemed happiest when in the quiet of his own household. His devotion to his work was remarkable, and nothing ever left his hands half-done. Indeed, it can fairly be said that his life was shortened by his assiduous labors.

Judge Choate annotated an edition of "Angell on Highways" and revised "Perry on Trusts," both of which rank high as authorities. It had been in his mind to write a book on Probate Law, but the decline of his strength from illness forbade the attempt. His death occurred at Sharon Springs, N. Y., whither he had gone in quest of relief, on July 11, 1888, and beside the loss to his family and friends left a void in the legal talent of Essex County not to be filled.

His portrait, by Frederic P. Vinton, painted for the Essex County Bar Association, hangs in the Law Library at Salem. On the twenty-fifth anniversary of his marriage the members of the Essex County Bar Association presented the Judge with a handsome silver service, consisting of pitcher, tankard, and salver.

Greenleaf Cogswell Choate, son of Hon. George F. Choate, was born in Salem, Mass. The family were then living in South Salem, at No. 12 Roslyn Street, and in this suburb of the city Greenleaf's boyhood was spent. He received his early education in the public schools of the city, and at the age of seventeen he entered Williams College in the class of 1884. After staying nearly two years he left to take a special course at Harvard. At the end of a year there, he commenced reading law in the office of Tuckerman & Huntington, in Salem. A series of rheumatic attacks during his childhood had made severe inroads on his naturally good constitution, and after a year or more his eyesight troubled him to such an extent that it was deemed advisable for him to seek a change of climate. He received an appointment as paymaster's clerk in the United States Army and went to Washington, where he at once had orders to go to San Francisco under Col. A. B. Carey, the paymaster for California. He spent some eighteen months in the West, and though occupying a clerical position, the travel through the country from post to post, and the out-door life and exercise did much toward restoring him to health. He returned in June, 1887, by way of Central America, having received the commendation of his superior officer for the manner in which his work had been performed. He resumed the study of law in Salem until his father's death, in 1888. In the fall of that year he went to New York and entered the Columbia Law School, but disease had fatally marked him, and in a few weeks he was taken ill and finally was compelled to return to Massachusetts. Through the following winter and early spring he was for the greater part of the time confined to his bed, bearing his suffering and enforced quiet without a murmur. Just as he had gained enough to make the future appear brighter, acute trouble of the heart appeared, and on April 26, 1889, he died.

Greenleaf Cogswell Choate was possessed of a bright and happy disposition. As a child he was noted for his roguishness and love of mischief. Nothing daunted him or cast him down. He was bold, courageous, and confident. His most prominent characteristic, however, was his utter unselfishness. No matter what the circumstances, he never thought of himself so long as there was another whom he could aid in any way. He made fast friends wherever he was by his sunny temperament and thoughtfulness. His intellectual capacity was of a high order, and had he lived, there is no question but that he would have made a name for himself to add to that which he inherited from his father.

Craig Cogswell Choate received his early education in the Salem public schools and at Dummer Academy. He entered Bowdoin College, and was graduated in the Class of 1887. After a year in the Harvard Medical School, he commenced teaching school, serving as Assistant Principal of Arms Academy, in Massachusetts, and Principal of a school in Bermuda. After returning from the latter place, he travelled in the West for some time, and then came East and entered into newspaper work, in which he found an occupation suited to his taste and talents, and in which he scored a success.

GEORGE CHEYNE SHATTUCK CHOATE, M. D.

DR. CHOATE was the oldest of a family of four sons and two daughters. His father was an eminent physician in Salem, Mass., residing in the house next below the Barton Square Church. This Choate homestead still remains in the family.

Dr. Choate's early education was in the public schools of his native city, and he prepared for college in the Dame Latin School, then in charge of Master Oliver Carlton, a distinguished teacher in his day. Mr. Choate took the regular course in Harvard College, and graduated with honor among the first scholars in the Class of 1846. He then entered the Harvard Medical School, from which he graduated in 1849. While pursuing his medical studies he made a specialty of mind diseases, and along this line subsequently he won great distinction.

Dr. Choate first established himself in practice in Salem, Mass., but in 1854 was appointed as Superintendent to take charge of the State Asylum for the Insane in Taunton, Mass. After some years he resigned this position, and, in 1870, went to New York and established a Private Asylum in Pleasantville N. Y., which has since become very widely and favorably known. At the same time he has carried on an extensive practice in the city of New York.

Dr. Choate, in his seventieth year, while actively engaged in his professional service, died suddenly of heart failure, in New York City.

The following announcement of the event from New York appeared in a Boston paper of date:—

DEATH OF A NOTED PHYSICIAN WHO WAS BORN IN SALEM IN 1827.

NEW YORK, June 30, 1896. Dr. George C. Shattuck Choate, of Pleasantville, Westchester County, died suddenly on Sunday while on a visit to this city. He was born at Salem, Mass., in 1827, being the oldest son of Dr. George Choate, of Salem, and a brother of Joseph H. Choate and William G. Choate, of this city.

He was married forty-four years ago to Miss Susan Kittredge, of North Andover, Mass., who survives him. Nine children were born to them, all of whom are living.

Dr. Choate was graduated from Harvard College in 1846, and from the Harvard Medical School in 1849. He was for ten years superintendent of the Massachusetts State Asylum for the Insane at Taunton. Twenty-six years ago he established a private asylum near Pleasantville. It was in this sanitarium that Horace Greeley died.

Dr. Choate had also a large practice in this city, in which he was actively engaged up to the time of his death.

CHARLES FRANCIS CHOATE, A. M., LL. B.

CHARLES FRANCIS CHOATE prepared for college in the schools of Salem, Mass., and graduated in the Class of 1849 from Harvard College, and in 1852 from the Harvard Law School. For three years, from 1850 to 1853, he was a tutor in the department of mathematics in the College. He was admitted to the Bar in September, 1854, and opened an office in Boston, and from that time to 1877 Mr. Choate was actively engaged in professional work. His law practice was very considerable as counsel for railroads. As early as 1864 he became the regular counsel for the Old Colony Railroad Corporation, and for more than thirty years was in the service of that company.

In 1872 he was chosen a director, and in 1877 he was elected President, and by annual re-election he continued to hold that office until the consolidation and lease of the road, May 1, 1893, to the New York, New Haven, and Hartford Railroad Company. He was the President also of the Old Colony Steamboat Company for the same period.

During Mr. Choate's administration as president there was a marvellous development of both the railroad and the steamboat companies. An equipment of new steamers was achieved, boats of unequalled convenience and comfort giving to the Fall River Line from Boston to New York a world-wide reputation.

Mr. Choate has been director and vice-president of the New England Trust Company, and June 13, 1893, he was chosen Actuary of the Massachusetts Hospital Life Insurance Company, which office he now, in 1896, fills. He was a member of the General Court from Cambridge in 1863, and of the City Government of Cambridge in 1864 and 1865.

The following newspaper clipping illustrates the readiness with which Mr. Choate could meet an exigency and see a way through a difficulty. It reads as follows:—

"Mr. Choate, president of the Old Colony Railroad Company, believes there is, in homely phrase, 'more than one way to kill a cat.' A wrecked ship bearing the date of 1626, was recently dug up on Cape Cod and given to the Pilgrim Society of Plymouth. 'Can't you ship it to us over your road free?' they asked him. 'No-o,' he said. 'I'm afraid I can't. The interstate law won't let me. But,' he added, reflectively, 'what did you say the date was, 1626? Oh, then we can fix it. I can make a special tariff for ships and marine articles manufactured previous to 1627!' And under the 'special tariff' the venerable hulk went free." Vid. The Boston Evening Journal, Feb. 4, 1889.

Mr. Choate is not only a man of large business capacities and great executive ability, but a man of a large and generous heart. Many a young man owes much to the friendly interest and influence of Mr. Choate in the start of a successful business career. He is a man of impressive presence and dignity, somewhat reserved in manner, of few words, but right to the point. His sympathies are tender and profound: like the deep waters, the surface does not reveal them. He is wholly genuine, serene, and commanding in his manhood and life, a fine example of all that is noblest and best in character as well as of all that gives success.

WILLIAM GARDNER CHOATE.

William Gardner<sup>7</sup> Choate (George<sup>6</sup>, George<sup>5</sup>, William<sup>4</sup>, Francis<sup>3</sup>, Thomas<sup>2</sup>, John<sup>1</sup>), son of Dr. George [503] and Margaret Manning (Hodges) Choate, was born Aug. 30, 1830, in Salem, Mass. He married, June 29, 1870, Mary Lyman Atwater, daughter of Caleb and Elizabeth L. (Clark) Atwater. She was born in Atwater, Ohio. They resided in New York City. There were no children.

Memoranda.

HON. WILLIAM GARDNER CHOATE, A. M., LL. B.

MR. CHOATE was graduated in 1852 from Harvard College, and in 1854 from the Harvard Law School. He studied law in the office of Hon. Stephen H. Phillips, District Attorney for Essex District, Salem, Mass. He was admitted to the Bar of Massachusetts in 1855, and in October of that year he made a tour of the Western States in company with his brother Joseph, and concluded to settle in North Danvers, a town, as he said, of six thousand inhabitants, without a lawyer.

After a short stay in North Danvers he removed to Salem, where he remained several years, during a portion of which time he was an assistant in the office of the Attorney-General of Massachusetts in Boston. He went to New York about the year 1865, and entered into partnership with William M. Prichard, Esq., forming the law firm of Prichard, Choate & Smith.

The trial of jury causes and argument of legal questions before all the Courts formed the branch of the firm business that engaged his attention. The eminent judicial qualities of his mind and character, his uprightness and stability, his accurate knowledge, penetration, impartiality, and sound judgment, found speedy recognition in the crowded ways of litigation, and quickly led to a considerable practice as referee in the trial of important causes that were referred to him, both upon the consent of parties and by appointment of the Courts.

In the spring of 1878 he was appointed by President Hayes to be United States District Judge for the Southern District of New York, and was sworn into office by his predecessor, Hon. Samuel Blatchford, on April 15, 1878. His first official act was at once to administer the oath of office in turn to Judge Blatchford, who had been appointed Circuit Judge. The latter had resigned the office of District Judge, to take effect upon the qualification of his successor, which admitted what seemed the novel proceeding of two persons successively inducting each other into office.

The duties of District Judge were at that time specially arduous. They embraced not only the hearing and determination of the admiralty causes arising in the port of New York, alone sufficient for a single judge, but also very numerous and complicated cases in bankruptcy and the hearing in banc of arguments in criminal causes. All these duties were discharged with signal ability and with satisfaction, not only to litigants generally, but to the public.

His written opinions, which were much sought for, are reported in the tenth volume of Benedict's Admiralty Reports, in the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth volumes of Bankruptcy Register, and in the first nine volumes of the Federal Reports.

The salary attached to the office was very much below the standard of judicial salaries allowed to the State judges, and quite inadequate to the necessities of a residence in the city of New York. On accepting the office it had been thought that an increase in the salary would soon be made, but several bills to that end having been defeated in Congress, he felt compelled to resign, which he did in June, 1881, very much to the regret of the Bar and of the general public.

Upon his resignation he resumed practice and entered the firm of Shipman, Barlow, Laroque, and Choate, the senior member of which was formerly United States District Judge for the District of Connecticut. His department, as before, is in the trial and argument of causes in Court, which embraces very important cases, not only of general practice but specially in the business of railroads, corporations, and in shipping and admiralty. These duties leave him no time for the hearing of ordinary causes as referee; but some important cases are referred to him.

Wm. G. Coate
Wm. G. Coate

On June 29, 1870, he was married to Mary L. Atwater, daughter of Caleb Atwater, of Wallingford, Conn., where he has a country seat as a summer residence, and also a farm, the management and stocking of which and the planting with trees have brought not only needed recreation, but improved health.

It was through his wife's efforts that the New York Exchange for Woman's Work was originally founded in 1877, as appears in the article quoted below, and largely by her efforts that it has attained its present importance and its extension to other cities. In this work Judge Choate has also lent his interest, counsel, and aid.

Though not spending much time to general society, he has been always highly esteemed and honored in the clubs to which he has belonged.

Of the Harvard Club he was president during two years, from 1872 to 1874, and he was for a long time in the governing board of the Century Club, the oldest and best of the literary and artistic clubs of the city.

His health was somewhat impaired under the constant pressure of severe judicial duties. But temperate and regular habits, and the constant practice of walking to his office, some three miles, every morning, with the greater freedom and variety of practice at the bar, have brought complete restoration.

There was an interesting occasion, June 29, 1885, which received mention in a recent local paper as follows:—

"Judge William G. Choate and wife celebrated their silver wedding at Wallingford, Conn., a few days ago, at the old Atwater residence of Gen. H. B. Carrington's great-grandfather. Joseph H. Choate, the well-known New York lawyer, brother of Judge Choate, and General Carrington were among the members of the family present."

MRS. CHOATE furnishes a happy example of practical Christian beneficence in setting on foot the movement described in the following paper, and fitly styled.—

"A SENSIBLE PLAN TO HELP WOMEN."

"Better than to solve the difficulties of the needy is it to put them in the way of solving themselves. This was the principle on which the New York Woman's Exchange was founded, and it explains its wonderful success. The New York Exchange, founded ten years ago, now has twenty-seven branches in the various States and Territories, and through its agency women, either at their own residences have received $1,000,000, half that sum going to the women of New York. The idea of having a market for the sale of the products of women's work first occurred to Mrs. W. G. Choate, on seeing the look of disappointment and chagrin which passed over the delicate face of a poor woman on receiving a paltry return for some fine needle-work which she offered to a store. The New York Exchange now deals in almost every product of female labor. On its counters will be found decorative work of all kinds, table linen, trousseaux, and all the necessities and delicacies of the table.

The payment of a fee of $5.00 enables one to offer for sale the work of three women for a year. The makers of the articles put a value on them, and the Exchange retains ten per cent of the price for selling them, to meet expenses. One woman with a family to support makes a very good income by selling chicken pies through the Exchange. Another, who failed in making woollen knitted goods, excels in gingerbread, while a third earns $90 a month in making delicious Exchange rolls, for which she has earned a deserved reputation. The wife of a physician, whose income was cut off by the loss of his health, last year contributed $800 to the support of the family by making babies' dresses. The manager of the Exchange suggests to applicants lines of work in which they may excel, and for the products of which there is a demand.

The customers are among the best families of New York. They do there not only to support a worthy institution, but because they find the Exchange articles made of the best materials. In summer time consignments of articles are made to summer resorts, the sales in one case last summer aggregating $2,000. Many touching stories are told of brave daughters in whose young shoulders have been suddenly thrown the support of families, and of mothers, who, though the market furnished by the Exchange for their handiwork, have been able to educate their children and bring them up respectably. While in many cities concerns are found bearing the name of exchanges, which are purely money-making institutions, yet charity is the purpose of the New York Exchange and its branches, and it is an institution which should be even more widely represented than it is."

JOSEPH HODGES CHOATE, A. M., LL. D.

MR. CHOATE, the youngest of the four brothers, was born in the old homestead in Salem, Mass. He was graduated in 1852 from Harvard College, in the same class with his brother, William Choate, and in 1854 was graduated from the Harvard Law School, and after a year of study of law in a Boston office he was admitted, in 1855, to the Bar of Massachusetts. In October of that year he made a tour of observation in the Western States, in company with his brother William, and on his return determined to settle in New York.

He first entered the office of Scudder and Carter in the autumn of 1855 for the study of the special practice of New York under the Code of Procedure. He afterwards formed a partnership with W. H. L. Barnes, under the name of Choate and Barnes, at 62 Wall Street, which was continued until he entered the firm of Evarts, Southmayd and Choate in 1860, where he has since remained.

For the last ten years he has been the undoubted leader of the New York Bar in the number, variety, and importance of the causes in which he has been engaged. In almost every cause of the first consequence he has been employed on the one side or the other. His admirable presence, his fluency, his wit and humor, his sound knowledge, his perfect self-possession, readiness, and self-control in all emergencies, his unfailing good humor, his strong, bold use of every fact that make in his clients' favor, and often the power to overcome by ridicule what cannot be answered seriously, have long made him, in jury trials, facile princeps, the idol of jurors, the terror of witnesses under cross examination, and the dread of his opponents.

Among the many causes célèbres are the Del Valle case for breach of promise, in which plaintiff claimed $50,000, and under Mr. Choate's defence recovered but $50; the Cesnola libel case, involving the general honesty of the Art Collection of Antiquities, in which, after a trial lasting several months, his client's integrity was vindicated; Gebhard vs. the Canada Southern R. R. Co.; Stewart vs. Huntington, and many others.

Mr. Choate has often been heard to ascribe both his success in particular causes and his general success at the Bar to good luck and to happy accidents. On the contrary, never was success more plainly and indisputably the result of a combination of qualities altogether personal and peculiar. In perfect possession and equipoise of all his faculties, in the intuitive perception of the uses to which trifling circumstances or accidents may be put as they arise, in the instant appropriation of them, transformed by the magic of his wit into the very means of attack or defence that his cause demands, are seen the same marks of genius for his profession that distinguish the great military commander from the martinet.

His almost constant engagements in the trial of jury causes has not prevented frequent arguments on points of law before the highest Courts of the State and the Supreme Court at Washington, nor his employment before the Surrogate's Court in many most important and intricate testamentary causes.

His distinction in the social and public life of New York has been as marked as his professional success. In 1856 he took the stump for Fremont, and has ever since been a Republican. He has never held or sought office. But since 1856 there has never been any important canvass in which he has not been heard with eagerness for his apt and witty treatment of public themes.

Since his memorable address at the opening of the Ladies' Sanitary Fair, about 1862, his services have been in equal request on every variety of occasion that life in the metropolis presents,—in addresses in behalf of temperance and various other philanthropic and artistic causes, at Commencement Exercises, in the reception of distinguished strangers, and in presiding at meetings without number.

From 1867 to 1871 he was president of the New England Society, and from 1874 to 1878 president of the Harvard Club, and for a score of years at the annual dinners of these societies he did not fail to respond when called up in speeches which were reported as among the gems of the occasion.

From 1873 to 1877 he was president of the Union League Club, and has always been an active and influential member,—a club that, formed during the dark days of the war to sustain the cause of the Union, has probably in its history from that day to this had a more important and beneficent influence on public affairs than any other club that ever existed.

The State Constitutional Convention, which assembled in 1894 to revise the Constitution of the State of New York, as had been reported, conferred the presidency on the one man best fitted to preside, "New York's distinguished lawyer and orator, Hon. Joseph H. Choate. His opening speech was a plea for the undivided devotion of the members to the great responsibilities that rest upon them, and for a wise and judicious, rather than an extreme and experimental temper."

Vid. The Review of Reviews, June, 1894.

"To be the presiding officer of a Constitutional Convention of the State of New York is a great distinction. Such an honor is only to be acquired about once in a generation. Men like John Bigelow, T. G. Alvord, and G. J. Tucker, who have sat in previous conventions, declared that no man quite reached the standard of Joseph Choate, president of the present convention."

Vid. The Salem Mercury, Aug. 22, 1894.

The following note of a New York law court reporter is of interest: "Lawyer Choate, who is a good deal of a wag in a quiet way, wants no better fun than a chance to bait ex-Senator Conkling in court. He often gets the chance, too, for he and Conkling frequently appear in the same case, though on opposite sides, of course. He knows by experience how easy it is to 'rile' the ex-Senator, especially if he suspects that he is being trifled with, and seems to take a sort of malicious delight in ruffling him whenever he can.

"In the Huntington case, just closed, he had opportunities for this sort of play, and he did not miss turning them to account. Everybody expects a 'circus' when Choate and Conkling encounter each other in a court room, and the performance that ensues is generally as well enjoyed by the judges as by the lawyers and miscellaneous spectators. The ex-Senator usually gives as good as he gets, but in a manner wholly different from Choate. He is either caustically polite or positively angry, while Choate is always buoyant and somewhat genial, and it can always be seen that he means to have some fun. Both are masters of sarcasm, but while Conkling is sharp and haughty, Choate is pungent and droll, and he gets most of the laughter,—as the comedian always does in the play. Conkling often encounters Choate's partner, the wordy and wily Everts, and a good deal of intellectual sparring takes place on these occasions, too. But it is when Choate has the case that the exercise is really lively, and other lawyers who are not busy just then drop in to see it. They might go to a pretty good play and not be as well pleased, and the happy clients pay for the whole of it."

A New York correspondent, writing to a Boston paper, speaks of Mr. Choate as being regarded "the greatest advocate at the New York Bar, and it is the opinion of lawyers that he has equal rank with the most brilliant of  nisi prius and jury lawyers who have ever gained the highest honors in this country.

"If the gossip of Mr. Choate's fellow lawyers is founded upon truth, then he has already gained the prize which his ambition set before him when, a young lawyer, he came to New York nearly forty years ago. He is then reported to have said that he would rather be esteemed the leading advocate of the American Bar than to gain the presidency of the United States."

His style of oratory is the conversational. "This conversational style of oratory has been brought to its highest charm by Mr. Choate. He seems to have studied very closely the methods of Wendell Phillips, who was the first to break away from oratorical traditions and to speak upon the platform in such way as to suggest to each hearer that the words were addressed to him personally. It is a manner of public speaking which is the most effective when it is done with the highest art, and, on the other hand, it is the most painful kind of speaking when it is done without art.

"So perfect is Mr. Choate's command of this manner of public speaking that the court rooms in New York are always packed when public announcement has been made of his appearance as counsel in a case. Standing before the judge or the jury, Mr. Choate is quite apt to thrust one hand in one of his trousers pockets or else to trifle gently with the charm upon his watch chain. He may even place one foot upon the rung of a chair. He begins to speak precisely apparently as he would do if he were engaged in private conversation with an acquaintance or one of the jury. By and by the judge, the jury, the great throng in the court room, begin to realize that the wonderful charm of his voice, that the easy familiarities of speech, that the quiet tones, the wit, are all controlled by an art which is invisible, but whose effect is most potent in the making of eloquent speech. . . . The wonderful fascination of his rhythmic sentences, his pure diction, sentence after sentence being spoken in the tongue of Shakespeare and the English Bible, reveal the fact that it is a master mind, and a masterly trained mind, that is thus occupied in the attempt to convince the court and jury. It is not until his speech is ended, perhaps some hours thereafter, that men realize the full beauty of it, and it is then they say to one another, 'Ah, you should have heard Choate's address to the jury, yesterday!'"

A LEADER OF THE AMERICAN BAR.

Under the above heading Mr. Munsey, in his magazine, speaks of Mr. Choate as the foremost lawyer of the day, and says, "New England's strongest representative in New York is Joseph H. Choate; New York's strongest representative at the Bar is Joseph H. Choate; the nation's strongest representative at the Bar is Joseph H. Choate. . . . He came from that old Puritan town where they hanged witches a few generations before his advent. He was born on the 24th of January, sixty-three years ago. He looks to be a decade younger. It would be well-nigh impossible to find a finer example of the physical and intellectual man. At the last annual dinner of the Ohio Society of New York, where Choate was making one of his delightful speeches, one of the guests, a clever newspaper man, turned to his friends and said, 'Choate is the most superb specimen of man in the world.' The remark went.

"Choate's fame, unlike that of his cousin and Webster and Evarts, has been won almost wholly at the Bar; theirs was lifted to greater heights in public service. Choate has never been in politics; he is not a politician. He is independent, fearless, and bold; he has no favors to ask, no promises to give, hence politicians have no use for him. Otherwise, he might be governor of New York to-day, and well in line for the presidential nomination.

"A man like Choate would bring dignity, genius, and learning to the White House. He would stand as the representative American, as a type of modern civilization in its best development. He would stand for right and justice and honor. — stand for the people and the people's interests. By the grace of his manner and the subtlety of his reasoning, he would command the admiration of diplomats, and the nation would be proud of his splendid intellect and superb presence."

Vid. Munsey's Magazine, April, 1896.

Mr. Choate has a summer residence, built under his own superintendence, in Stockbridge, Mass., which is a charming specimen of cottage architecture, and stands in a delightful situation.

In 1861 he was married to Miss Sterling, a daughter of Frederick Sterling, Esq., of Cleveland, Ohio. They have had five children, only three of whom are now living. The oldest, a son, and a young man of brilliant promise, died in his twentieth year, while a student in Harvard College. The following paper is an account given of his death and the funeral service.

TO A YOUNG MAN'S MEMORY.

THE funeral services over the remains of Ruluff Sterling Choate, eldest son of Mr. Joseph H. Choate, took place yesterday at All Souls' Unitarian Church, on Fourth Avenue and Twentieth Street.

Mr. Ruluff Choate died very suddenly on Saturday evening at the residence of his father. He had dined with the family and was in a very cheerful frame of mind. While all were sitting at the table Mr. Choate asked his son to take for him a message to Dr. Wm. H. Draper, who resides at No. 19 East Forty-seventh Street. The request was complied with and the young man returned, having been from his father's house but a very short time. He joined the family circle, and in a few minutes afterward complained of violent pains in his head. Nausea and unconsciousness followed immediately, and Dr. Draper was sent for. He arrived very promptly, but in three minutes afterward young Mr. Choate died. Subsequent examination satisfied the physician that death had been caused by apoplexy.

At the funeral there were many distinguished citizens and immediate friends of the deceased and of Mr. Choate. Among the former were Mr. Roscoe Conkling, Mr. Edwards Pierrepont, Assistant Treasurer Thomas C. Acton, Dr. W. H. Draper, Judges Van Vorst and Addison Brown, Mr. Frederick R. Condert, Mr. Albert Stickney, Mr. E. N. Dickerson, District Attorney Olney, and Mr. W. M. Evarts, Jr. There was also a large representation of the fellow-students of the deceased, from Harvard University.

The pastor of the church, the Rev. Theodore C. Williams, conducted the services. The choir sang the hymn, "Thy Will be Done," and Miss Adeline Hibbard sang the "Ave Maria." After a short prayer and the reading of appropriate selections from the Scriptures, the benediction was pronounced.

The congregation arose in solemn silence as the coffin, strewn with flowers, was borne down the aisle, followed by the afflicted parents of the deceased and their more immediate relatives. The remains were conveyed to Woodlawn Cemetery for interment.

And lately, within a few days, on the twentieth day of this current month of July, 1896, the older daughter passed out of the earthly life into the heavenly. But what heaven gains earth loses, and the home bereft of her loved presence is swept by the billows of a great sorrow, and human hearts are crushed and made sad. Father, mother, brothers, and only sister are great mourners to-day.

And such is life's experience, made up of lights and shadows, and we soon fly away.

A BOSTON paper announces the death of Dr. Gersdorff with the following obituary sketch:—

"DR. E. B. DE GERSDORFF, formerly a well-known German homœopathic physician of Salem, and for nearly twenty years of Boston, died on Thursday at the residence of his brother-in-law, Dr. Choate, at Pleasantville, N. Y., at the age of sixty-three. ## Memoranda.

MR. CHOATE appears in the following account, published in California:—

"It was a happy inspiration which led the fathers of the State of Maine to adopt as the motto of the young commonwealth, 'Dirigo,' direct.

"Situated on the northeastern confines of the Union, her territory reaches well towards the limits of a monarchical colony, and she stands, as it were, the most advanced sentinel of the hosts of Republican States. This position in the national sisterhood has had a marked effect in the formation of the character of her citizens, and they have inherited with the air they breathe an ardor, a courage, and a strength of will that is strongly marked, and is noticeable wherever found. In every enterprise requiring push and daring they are among the first; in every undertaking where brain and brawn united win the day, the hardy men of Maine are found. When gold was discovered on the Pacific Coast, and the rush was made for the new El Dorado, the sons of Maine were in the van. They joined in the great caravans that toiled and struggled in the weary march across the plains; they enlisted in the army of gold hunters whose march over the isthmus was marked by a line of fever-stricken victims; they joined the fleet of the Argonauts that doubled Cape Horn and passed weary months upon the sea, all seeking one goal, all bound for one haven. Among the men from Maine who joined the hosts of '49 was the subject of this sketch.

DANIEL CHOATE.

"Daniel Choate was born in Kennebec

County, Me., on the 9th of September, 1828. His parents were farmers, and young Choate spent the early years of his life on the farm, availing himself of such educational advantages as were to be found in the district school until 1847, when he went to Lowell, Mass., to attend school. He remained there until the winter of 1848-49. In February of the latter year he joined a party of gold-seekers, and on the first day of March sailed from Boston for Chagres, on the bark 'Thames.' They had an uneventful voyage, and reached the isthmus in safety. The journey overland to Panama was attended with the usual discomforts incident to the trip in those days, but the party were more fortunate than many. Here, however, they were detained for a month, waiting for a vessel in which to obtain passage to San Francisco. Finally they embarked on board an English brig, the 'Two Friends.' This portion of their journey was destined to be the most tedious of any. The vessel was small and overcrowded, the winds were light or adverse, and they were one hundred and sixty-seven days on the voyage. During this time the water and provisions got very low, and they were on short allowance for one hundred days of the time. Finally, on the 12th of October, or over seven months from the time they left home, they sailed through the Golden Gate and came to an anchor off the straggling settlement of Yerba Buena. The passengers of the 'Two Friends' were not long in getting ashore, and after a brief stop started for the mines, Choate making Ophir his objective point. He remained there through the winter months, and in April started for Yuba. During the summer he was engaged with others in turning the river from its bed, but the results were not up to the expectations of the prospectors. In the spring of 1851 Choate returned to Ophir, and soon became engaged in mercantile business at this point. He remained at Ophir, carrying on a general mercantile business, for seventeen years, until the mines were exhausted. He then came down to San Francisco, and in 1868 opened a dry-goods house on Kearny Street, between California and Pine. In July of the following year he wanted a brief rest from business cares and a change of air, and having heard of the sanitary advantages of San Diego he made up his mind to visit it. Steamers were then running down the coast but once a month. Mr. Choate had not been many hours in San Diego before he had decided that here was the place for him to locate. He felt confident that upon the shores of this magnificent harbor would eventually arise a city that would equal San Francisco. He had seen that city when it was but a hamlet, and he saw no reason why San Diego should not in time increase in population and wealth as it had done. So sanguine was his faith that he did not even return to San Francisco to close up his business, but wrote to his brother to sell out and follow him. In August, 1869, he found himself permanently located in San Diego, engaged in the real estate business. He made it a point to buy up land by the acre, from one to three miles out, and carry all he could of it, looking to the future for his profits. He had but one object in view,—the accumulation of a fortune which he had come to California to gain, but had failed to acquire in the mines. His faith in the future of his adopted city never forsook him, and through all the fluctuations that have marked the progress of San Diego towards substantial prosperity, he held on to his real estate and added to it as he could. It is a singular fact that the land Mr. Choate bought in those early days he holds now. He has laid out ten different additions to the city, each containing from forty to eighty acres, and he now has them all on the market. The lots are selling at from $200 to $500 each. The increase in the value of his property within the last year is over $300,000.

Mr. Choate is the promoter of the famous College Hill Loan Association, which is destined to be one of the most successful real estate projects ever undertaken in Southern California. The tract consists of one thousand six hundred acres, situated just north of the city park. It is laid out in blocks and lots and is now on the market. Every other block in the tract is given to the Methodist Episcopal Church; and the first $200,000 realized from the sale of the church lands is to be used for building a college. The balance is to be sold from time to time, and the interest alone can be used. This college (which is a branch of the Methodist Episcopal University of Southern California) will probably have an endowment fund of at least $5,000,000, greater than most of the great colleges of the Eastern States. The other half of the land is the property of the College Hill Land Association, which consists of ten members, all of whom reside in this city. The stock of the Association is now selling at $100 per share; its original cost was $5 a share. There are one thousand five hundred shares. The Association is still buying land. It is the intention of the Methodist people to begin the erection of a college of fine arts during the present winter. There will be a steam motor line running through the tract in a short time, and water pipes will be laid to every block by the same time. Mr. Choate put this great enterprise in operation by himself, contributing one hundred and fifty acres of land.

Mr. Choate is also interested in 'City Heights' Addition, containing one thousand acres, two and one-half miles from the city and just east of the College Hill Tract. This tract was placed on the market Sept. 1, 1887, and the sales the first day reached $87,000 in this city and $16,000 in San Francisco, at $100 per lot. Then they were raised to $125 for a week, and then to $150. The total sales to Jan. 1, 1888, exceeded $250,000. The owners of the tract have entered into a contract with Babcock & Story for a motor line through it, around to the College Hill Tract and down Fifth Street, making a belt line from D Street.

Mr. Choate was one of the prime movers in the various efforts that were made to induce the building of railroads to San Diego, from the first Tom Scott boom to the final completion of the California Southern. In 1875 he was appointed postmaster, and retained the office until 1882, when he resigned to attend to his private business. He has now retired from active business, but acts as an adviser in the development of his many important real estate enterprises. Mr. Choate has just completed a palatial residence on the corner of Fifth and Hawthorne streets, on Florence Heights. He also contemplates erecting a number of substantial business buildings on several principal streets during the coming spring. Mr. Choate is a faithful and consistent member of the Methodist Church, and has given largely to many public charities. He is now in the possession of a princely fortune, yet he says he would gladly forego it all, rather than again pass through the anxieties, reverses, and disappointments he has experienced during his residence in San Diego." *Vid. GEN. WINFIELD SCOTT CHOATE, LL. B.

MR. CHOATE was educated in the common schools of his native town, and in Kent's Hill Seminary. At the age of sixteen years he commenced teaching school, and by this means for the next four years he earned nearly enough to meet the expenses of his education.

He went to Augusta, Me., in 1870, and entered as a law student the office of the late Hon. Artemas Libbey. In 1871 he was admitted to the Harvard Law School, and graduated in June, 1872, taking the degree of LL. B. He was admitted to the Kennebec Bar, March 11, 1872. After graduating from the Harvard Law School he entered into partnership with Judge Libbey, of Augusta, Me., and continued in the practice of his profession until 1889. For nine years he served on the Board of School Superintendence, and also during the same period he was City Solicitor for the city of Augusta.

Mr. Choate is a lawyer of favorable reputation and growing prominence. He was appointed, in 1883, Commissioner of the Circuit Court of the United States, of the District of Maine, and before him Hon. James G. Blaine deposed, Sept. 17, 1884, in a libel suit. He was elected, in 1888, Clerk of Courts, which position he still fills. He was also elected, in 1896, the Mayor of Augusta, receiving eight hundred and seven votes out of a total of eight hundred and sixty-four votes cast; only fifty-seven votes being cast for opposing candidates.

He has been actively identified with the military service of the State. From a private he rose by promotion to the Lieutenant-Colonelcy of the First Regiment, and in 1893 he was appointed by Governor Cleaves Inspector-General on his staff, with the rank of Brigadier-General. He is also a member of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, of Boston.

General Choate is a Mason, being Past Master of Bethlehem Lodge, Past Senior Grand Warden of the Grand Lodge of Maine, and a thirty-second degree Mason. He has always been a Republican in politics, and taken an active part in political campaigns as a speaker. General Choate is an attendant of St. Mark's Episcopal Church, has been for eighteen years a member of the vestry, and is now Senior Warden of the parish.

The public esteem in which General Choate is held, and his popularity, are reflected by the following newspaper clippings:—

"AUGUSTA, ME., March 9, 1896. At the election held here to-day, W. S. Choate was elected by the Republicans as Mayor. The prohibition candidate received only fifty-six votes, and there was no Democratic nominee in the field."

Vid. The Boston Herald, March 10, 1896.

"General Choate is widely and favorably known throughout the State, and as at home has the confidence of his fellow citizens. Level-headed, careful, and painstaking, few men have come into the mayor's chair so well equipped to assume the responsible duties of this office as he. His townsmen look to see him called to a still higher position of honor and trust."

Vid. Lewiston Evening Journal, March 9, 1896.

"Regarded as one of the ablest men connected with the military department of the State, and as an eminently successful man in his profession, General Choate is one of Maine's well-known sons.

"A man of unquestioned uprightness and able judgment, he is well fitted to assume the duties and responsibilities of public life."

RUFUS M. CHOATE.

The travelling public needs no introduction to Mr. Rufus M. Choate, the popular passenger agent of the Western Transportation and Union Steamboat Companies, who for over a quarter of a century has been ticketing westward-bound lake tourists to Chicago and beyond.

Mr. Choate was born in Clarence, N. Y. His common-school education was supplemented by a course at the Clarence Academy, and a few months' instruction in business methods at Bryant & Stratton's College in Buffalo, N. Y. In 1860 the ambitious young man went West, but returned the following year. He was among the first to respond to the call of his country for three months' volunteers to suppress the Rebellion, and together with the gallant company of Clarence boys proceeded at once to the front. At the close of a term of patriotic military service he was honorably discharged. Upon his return to Buffalo he became identified with the transportation business as an employee of the late Charles Ensign. His aptitude for this calling led to a rapid promotion, and in due time he was appointed general passenger agent for all the Chicago lines.

In the year 1884 Mr. Choate entered into a copartnership with Mr. J. E. Walsh, to carry on a general real estate, insurance, and ticket business at No. 122 Exchange Street.

Mr. Choate is a large owner of real estate in the Thirteenth Ward, and his house and grounds are the finest in that section of the city. He is untiring in his efforts to secure for the southeastern portion of the city rapid transit, better drainage facilities, and the projected one hundred thousand dollar park, all of which he expects to see secured within the next few years.

Mr. Choate and his family were deeply afflicted by the sad death of his son, Rufus Mortimer Choate [1707], a promising young man of eighteen years. The notice of his death is given by a Buffalo correspondent.

The regiment of nine hundred strong was mustered into the United States service in Kalamazoo, Mich., in September, 1862, and, under command of Col. Orlando H. Moore, marched, Oct. 1, 1862, forth to the field of hardship, fighting, perils, death, and victory, with Burnside in East Tennessee, at Atlanta and Charleston with Sherman, with Thomas in Tennessee and North Carolina and Fort Fisher, fulfilling a campaign of many battles and much hard fighting. The survivors were mustered out of service June 24, 1865, in Salisbury, N. C., the regiment consisting of twenty-seven officers and three hundred and fifty-one enlisted men.

Their return was welcomed in Detroit and Jackson by public receptions, and July 3, 1865, they disbanded and scattered to their homes, having done their duty nobly to establish upon more enduring foundations the great temple of American freedom.

Louisa J<sup>8</sup> Choate (William K<sup>7</sup>, Nathan<sup>6</sup>, William<sup>5</sup>, William<sup>4</sup>, Francis<sup>3</sup>, Thomas<sup>2</sup>, John<sup>1</sup>), daughter of William K. [953] and Mary E. (Gillett) Choate, was born April 20, 1856, in Adrian, Mich. She married, Oct. 10, 1883, Andrew J. Schliemann, son of John and Caroline Schliemann. He was born June 14, 1859, in Adrian, Mich., where they resided. Mrs. Schliemann died Jan. 24, 1891. There were no children.

Memoranda.

MR. SCHLIEMANN is engaged in the railway mail service. The death of Mrs. Schliemann was announced in a local paper as follows:—

DEATH OF MRS. SCHLIEMANN.

One of the saddest deaths that has come to this city for many years, occurred at eight o'clock this morning, at No. 14 Dennis Street, when the spirit of Mrs. Andrew J. Schliemann took its flight to another world. . . .

The death is peculiarly sad, as it leaves the father, Mr. W. K. Choate, entirely alone in the world, his wife, sister, and two daughters having gone before.

To Mr. Schliemann the Times wishes to extend its most heartfelt sympathy. He has lost one of the most loving and lovable women ever sent to bring sunshine into this world. The cup is bitter, indeed, and hard to bear, but the sweet influence of one of the purest Christian characters is left behind to console those who loved her as their own life.

PARKER COGSWELL CHOATE.

Parker Cogswell<sup>8</sup> Choate (George Francis<sup>7</sup>, William<sup>6</sup>, George<sup>5</sup>, William<sup>4</sup>, Francis<sup>3</sup>, Thomas<sup>2</sup>, John<sup>1</sup>), son of Hon. George Francis [956] and Abby Parker (Cogswell) Choate, was born June 5, 1862, in Salem, Mass. He married, Feb. 21, 1889, Jessie Jean Dickson, daughter of John C. and Lucia A. (Phillips) Dickson. She was born Feb. 18, 1869, in Minneapolis, Minn. They resided in Ogden, Utah, and in Portland, Me.

Memoranda.

PARKER COGSWELL CHOATE was educated in the public schools of Salem, and at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. From the latter school, where he paid particular attention to mechanical and mining engineering, he went to Prescott, Ariz., as assistant superintendent in some mines there. Later he returned to the East, and took a position in Portland, Me., with a company engaged in manufacturing zinc oxide, and soon made himself thoroughly acquainted with the business. After his father's death he went into the employ of the Union Pacific Railway, being connected with their coal mines in Wyoming. After some time with the Union Pacific he accepted a position with a syndicate to examine mines in the West and South.

While engaged in this work in Virginia he became deeply interested in the question of the extraction of zinc from its ores and its after treatment, and later on he became associated with Mr. Augustus C. Downing, Jr., of New York, for the purpose of treating zinc by electrolysis. Several patents on the treatment of zinc were taken out, and eventually a corporation was formed with Mr. Choate as treasurer, and a plant established in Portland, Me., for the handling of complex zinc ores and the extraction of their valuable constituents under Mr. Choate's patents. These patents have attracted much attention, and future possibilities are yet to be developed.

He believes that the complex ores which are a present waste are really more valuable than ores that are being treated. New England abounds in complex ores to the exclusion largely of others. "Mining," he says, "in Maine and New Hampshire has not yet begun."

Mr. Choate is a man of an inventive, adventurous type of mind, with a purpose and a logical reason for all he does and attempts. By his superior force of mental power he easily leads and commands the trained engineers under him, and keeps in control his undertakings on the road to ultimate success. He is a man of sterling integrity and honesty, free hearted and open handed, a deep thinker, and of liberal ideas, having all the elements of a strong and commanding character.

FRANCIS BRADFORD CHOATE.

Francis Bradford<sup>8</sup> Choate (George Francis<sup>7</sup>, William<sup>6</sup>, George<sup>5</sup>, William<sup>4</sup>, Francis<sup>3</sup>, Thomas<sup>2</sup>, John<sup>1</sup>), son of Hon. George Francis [956] and Abby Parker (Cogswell) Choate, was born Aug. 28, 1868, in Salem, Mass. He married, Jan. 11, 1896, Helen Milward Warrack, daughter of James and Lydia Test (Arion) Warrack. She was born Sept. 6, 1868, in Chicago, Ill. They reside in Sacramento, Cal.

Memoranda.

FRANCIS BRADFORD CHOATE, the youngest of his father's family, was educated at the schools in Salem, under private teachers, at Dummer Academy, and the Carlton School in Bradford, Mass., until he entered the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Here he forged ahead rapidly and was making the most of his opportunities when his father's death compelled him to leave with his course uncompleted. He entered the freight office of the Union Pacific Railway at Omaha, Neb., when barely twenty years of age, and at once acquired the confidence and good-will of his associates and superiors. By faithful and intelligent work he was advanced in position and pay until he was made travelling freight agent for the Nebraska Division at an age when many young men are still at their studies. In this position he won an enviable reputation among railroad men, and was later transferred to the Oregon Division with headquarters at Portland, Ore.

After a few months in Portland he was made the Union Pacific agent in Sacramento, Cal., a position of considerable trust and responsibility for a man of his age.

Francis Bradford Choate is a man of the same sturdy honesty and integrity as his father and brothers. He has many traits in which he closely resembles his father, the same quiet, unruffled temperament, the same scorn of anything mean or low, the same philosophical way of looking at men and things, the same dry humor and quiet enjoyment of a joke.

Mrs. Choate's father was a Scotchman. He was a British Consul, stationed for many years in Chicago, Ill. Her mother was an own cousin to Lew Wallace.

JOSEPH KITTREDGE CHOATE.

He married, Dec. 8, 1873, Jennie Eldred, daughter of James and Charity (Cornell) Eldred. She was born July 7, 1853, in Greenville, N. Y. They resided on Sherman Avenue, Denver, Col. MR. CHOATE was assistant superintendent of the Denver and South Park Railroad. Subsequently he was superintendent of the Colorado Division of the Union Pacific Railroad, which position he resigned in 1890.

Vid. Boston Evening Journal, May 12, 1890.

Mr. Choate is now, in 1896, the President of the Denver Cotton Mills Company, and is a man who has large business enterprises in hand. He is an exceedingly tall man, and is humorously called the "Human Lightning-Rod." He has dark auburn hair, thick reddish moustache, and towers to the height of six feet four and a half inches, a king among the tall men of Denver. He is so slim in build that he looks even taller than he is. Alluding to his height he is reported to have said:—

"If you think I am tall, though, you ought to have seen Dr. Bancroft, one of the early pioneers of Denver. For a long time this gentleman, whose white whiskers gave him a venerable appearance, was known as the tallest man of the Rocky Mountain region. His measure has been given at more than two inches over me. Everybody has heard of Dr. Bancroft. He made a lot of money and has been known far and wide."

To hear Mr. Choate tell of how other men have overtopped him one is constrained to try and think he is n't talking to a tall man at all, but when he leaves him and feels the queer sensation in his neck as the result of this upward gaze, he cannot get it out of his mind that the suave Coloradian is indeed a human lightning-rod.

But he is something more than tall; he must be brainy, a man of towering ability, head and shoulders above all common men in business capacity and executive power, as shown by the positions which he commands and honorably fills.

SUSAN KITTREDGE CHOATE.

Memoranda.

MR. SEARS was the only child of a wealthy East India merchant of Boston, Mass. His father died while he was quite young. He "received his early education at a private school in Andover, Mass., from which he was sent to Germany, where he continued his studies. Returning to America in 1873, at the age of nineteen, he entered Yale College, and was graduated in the Class of 1877."

Mr. Sears by prudent management has added to his large inheritance, and ranks among the most wealthy men of Boston and of New England. "Though the care of his large estate requires much of his attention, he nevertheless finds time for much practical philanthropy. Among his charitable works is the West End Workingmen's Club, which is established on the lines laid down by Robert Treat Paine in the Wells Memorial Workingmen's Institute. In connection with Rev. Phillips Brooks, Alpheus Hardy, and others, Mr. Sears organized the Poplar Street Club, the purpose of which is to counteract the influence of the saloon among the poorer classes. Mr. Sears also presented to the Episcopal parish at Marlboro', Mass., a fine new edifice. . . .

"Mr. Sears's Boston residence is on Arlington Street. He owns a magnificent farm in Southboro, Mass., and his stables there are filled with blooded stock. He is one of the summer residents of Bar Harbor, and though he is the wealthiest man there, his cottage is one of the most unpretentious.

"Both Mr. and Mrs. Sears are ardent amateur musicians, and the musicales at their home during the winter season have become celebrated. Mr. Sears is also a prominent patron of art, his collection being one of the best in New England. Many of the best examples of the modern French and Flenish schools adorn his collection, which has been selected with rare taste. He is a member of the Somerset, Union, Country, and St. Botolph Clubs, and of the Eastern Yacht Club, his steam yacht 'Novya' being one of the fine pleasure craft on the Atlantic waters. . . . He is extremely modest, unassuming, and quiet in his tastes." Vid. Massachusetts of To-day, 1892, p. 285.

MR. CHOATE was reared on a farm. When eighteen years of age he started out to win his way in the world. After making trial of peddling, serving as an attendant in asylums, and various other things, he finally studied veterinary surgery: graduated, in 1891, from the American Veterinary College of New York City, and entered at once a successful practice of his profession in Portsmouth, N. H. Subsequently he removed to Lewiston, Me., where he has a well-arranged and thoroughly-furnished establishment for veterinary purposes. This embraces an operating-room, a dispensary, hospital accommodations for horses, with a large ambulance arrangement, and a shoeing forge.

Dr. Choate is a thorough student, and up to date in all that pertains to veterinary science and the successful practice of his profession. The public appreciate his knowledge and skill, and give him enough to do and pay him well for his service.

He is spoken of in high terms of commendation as one "who has made his mark in the world alone and unaided, and to-day occupies an enviable position in a professional and business life. His achievements are a good illustration of what a poor boy, if well-born, can do, if he has a will and courage to do it."

§Memoranda.

THE MARRIAGE OF MR. WILLIAM H. STOREY AND MISS CLARA E. CHOATE.

MR. STOREY was the United States Signal Service operator at Camp Grant, Ariz., and as he could not obtain leave of absence to make the journey by wagon to San Diego for his wedding, and as there was no minister or other person qualified to perform the marriage ceremony within hundreds of miles of Camp Grant, it appeared as though the wedding would have to be indefinitely postponed. But Mr. Storey did not propose to let things go that way if they could be possibly averted. "A contract by telegraph is binding; then why," he thought, "can we not be married by telegraph?" This logic proved sound, Miss Choate made the pilgrimage to Camp Grant, and the couple were married by Rev. Jonathan L. Mann, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church of San Diego, by telegraph from that city.

The incidents of the wedding were unique and interesting. At that time Lieut. Philip Reade, U. S. A., was the officer in charge of the government telegraph lines of the department of California and Arizona, with headquarters at San Diego. Upon being asked permission to use the telegraph lines from San Diego to Camp Grant, after regular hours, for the purpose of performing a marriage ceremony, Lieutenant Reade readily consented, and issued the following general order:—

To all Managers of Stations along the Entire Division:

You are hereby informed that the wires of this division after 8 P. M., April 24, will be used for the purpose of conducting a marriage ceremony by telegraph between San Diego and Camp Grant, and you and your friends are specially invited to be present on the occasion, to assist if necessary and to see that good order is maintained.

(Signed)

PHILIP READE, Lieutenant and Officer in Charge.

Each operator on the line accepted this novel invitation and, with invited friends, was present at his station as wedding guests. At 8.30 P. M. the father of the bride sent this message from San Diego to the wedding party at Camp Grant:—

Greeting to our friends at Camp Grant. We are ready to proceed with the ceremony.

D. CHOATE AND PARTY.

W. H. STOREY.

CLARA E. CHOATE.

Then the Rev. Mr. Mann read the marriage service, which was repeated to Camp Grant as uttered, word for word, by Mr. Blythe, chief operator at the San Diego office. At the proper moment, the solemn "I do" came back over the wires signed first by "William H. Storey," then by "Clara E. Choate." Then, following the words of the minister, the instruments clicked:—

"As a token of your sincerity you will please join your right hands."

The answer came promptly: "It is done."

The service was then concluded in regular form, after which congratulatory messages were sent the bride and groom from all stations. Suddenly Chief Operator Blythe of San Diego broke in and telegraphed Mr. Storey that "the Silver Cornet Band of San Diego is just outside the office, giving you and your bride a serenade," a welcome that was warmly appreciated even though it was not heard at Camp Grant, six hundred and fifty miles away.

Mr. Storey, who made a fortune in San Diego during the memorable Southern California "boom" of 1886-8, says that even yet it is not an uncommon experience of his, upon being introduced to an entire stranger, to have the latter ask, "Storey! Let me see, was n't you married by telegraph some years ago?" and an affirmative nod would bring out the exclamation: "Well, well, I was a guest at your wedding. I heard the whole ceremony at the telegraph office at —, Arizona."

Vid. San Diego, Cal., Daily Union, April 25, 1876.

SAMUEL CHOATE, THE HERMIT.

From Nathaniel B. Shurtleff's Topographical and Historical Account of Boston.

"Just north of the group, i. e. 'North Rocks,' above described, is Green Island, perhaps the least pleasantly situated of all the islands at the mouth of the harbor; yet it is not uninhabited. It was known a hundred years ago as the North Brewster, and contains one apology for a house. At the time of the destruction of the Minot's Ledge Light-house, in 1851, the tide rose so high that its two inhabitants had to be rescued by one of the pilot boats. On this island has resided for many years a strange being, singular in his habits, and possessing a very independent spirit. Mr. Samuel Choate was not far from seventy years of age, when, in February, 1865, the inclemency of the weather was so great that he was temporarily compelled to leave his chosen abode of twenty years, and accept the protection of the Harbor Police. It appears that in his younger days he was an ordinary seaman, and that, about the year 1845, he established himself upon the Island, where he dwelt in a rudely constructed hut, sustaining himself by fishing, and subsisting on fish, lobsters, and mussels. For many years, inducements were offered him to pass his winters where he could be made more comfortable, but to no effect, until the severity of the weather was such that he must necessarily have perished but for his timely rescue. He had been brought up to Boston once before, on the eighth of July, 1862, when his boat had been broken to pieces; but, preferring his hermit life, returned again to his island. On the eighth of February, 1865, he was sent to the almshouse at Bridgewater, where he subsequently died."
