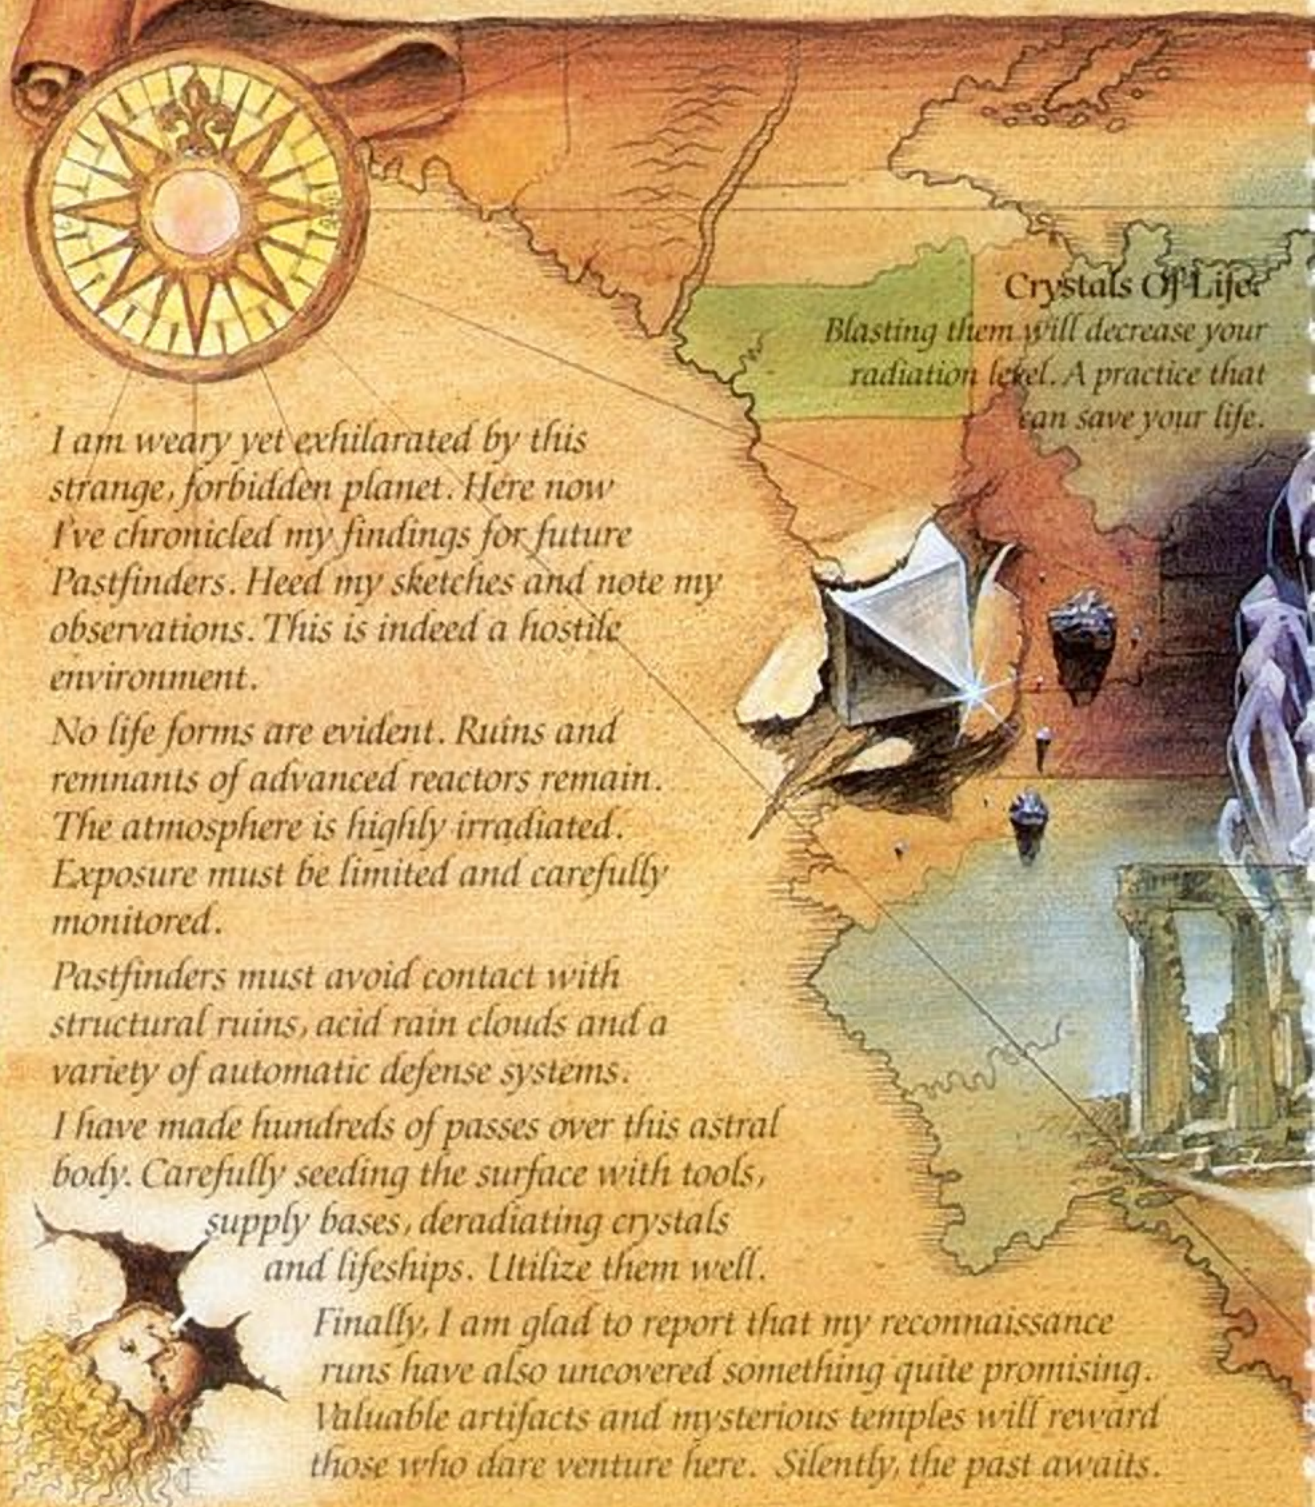
PASTFINDER 22
A Journey To The Moons Of



I am weary yet exhilarated by this strange, forbidden planet. Here now I've chronicled my findings for future Pastfinders. Heed my sketches and note my observations. This is indeed a hostile environment.

No life forms are evident. Ruins and remnants of advanced reactors remain. The atmosphere is highly irradiated. Exposure must be limited and carefully monitored.

Pastfinders must avoid contact with structural ruins, acid rain clouds and a variety of automatic defense systems.

I have made hundreds of passes over this astral body. Carefully seeding the surface with tools, supply bases, deradiating crystals and lifeships. Utilize them well.

Finally, I am glad to report that my reconnaissance runs have also uncovered something quite promising. Valuable artifacts and mysterious temples will reward those who dare venture here. Silently, the past awaits.

Once, The Home of Gods. These mysterious, majestic structures can be enormously beneficial. Store precious artifacts within their walls. Don't be alarmed as you enter. Temples somehow cast a temporary shield of invulnerability over you. Fascinating.

Instruments of Survival. Shields, scramblers and other provisions are well worth retrieval.

Riches Within Your Reach. It's been said: The more artifacts a pastfinder claims, the higher his status. Maybe true. But very, very risky.

High Danger. Designed centuries ago, robot ships sadly still attack anyone without warning or reason.

Eureka! One extraordinary type of artifact is worth five times any other. You'll know one when you see one.
