QUANGO

Angus grows his mushrooms in eight caverns deep beneath the surface of the planet Sedron. It is now harvest-time, and he must tunnel his way through the rich soil in which the mushrooms grow. Here and there in the soil are boulders; if Angus digs a hole beneath one, it will fall - with possibly fatal results! Small shoots of the giant Quendorian wortweed - toxic to robots - have taken root in some places. If soil is removed from above a weed, it rapidly grows to fill the space.

As well as the natural hazards of the caves, Angus is hunted by the Wrightoid robots, evil but stupid servants of Epple the Speedlord. Angus can destroy the robots by digging away earth from under a boulder, causing it to fall and crush the pursuing Wrightoid.

At the centre of each cavern is an egg of the incredible Quango bird. This ornithological nightmare has the power to fly through earth and rock in pursuit of its prey - robots! When the egg hatches, watch out!

In the four deepest caves, underground streams slowly flood the passages with water. Angus is not rust-proofed! To defend himself as he gathers the ten mushrooms from each cave, Angus is armed with five earthbombs. The ultimate in selective weaponry, these bombs destroy only earth, Wrightoids, Quangos and - due to a small technical flaw - Angus himself. The timer on each bomb is just long enough for Angus to plant it, and get out of range before it explodes. After the eighth caverns crop is harvested, more mushrooms will have grown in the earlier caves, and Angus must begin again, in ever-increasing peril from his foes.
