THUNDERBOLT

When interstellar relationships between Earth and Proxima broke down both sides moved their machines of war into prime strategic positions.

It was in the attempt to attain one of these positions that an Earthonian Battle Cruiser was fired upon and subsequently atomised by a Proximian 'Stinger' fighter craft. Both sides slipped into a frenzied state of war. Neither side was more technologically advanced and so an agonising equilibrium of destruction power was attained. The centuries crawled by with neither side becoming dominant.

More and more destructive weapons were developed until finally the ultimate destruction device was stumbled upon by both sides simultaneously — the Chronoclasm bomb.

Shoot 'Em Up!
Amazing!!!

It could not only destroy things in the normal three dimensions but it could destroy things along the scale of time. It could destroy things that were, things that are and things that are to be! Both sides realised the terrible consequences of detonating such a weapon so both agreed NEVER to use it. UNTIL . . .

A Chronoclasm bomb was detonated in the year 2555 and in the following chaos no one really knew who was to blame. The bomb ripped a huge hole in the space-time continuum. It tore through the time scale five centuries either side of the detonation point.

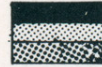

The actual detonation point was somewhere over Europe and as a result all the fighting machines both friend and foe, from past, present and future were dragged into the seething battle — INCLUDING YOU! You pilot THUNDERBOLT an Earthonian Bi-Fighter reminiscent of an ancient 20th century plane.

Treat all encountered craft as hostile. Avoid buildings and defence barriers.

If the time bearing starts to fluctuate you must land immediately.

Slowly, the effect of the bomb will subside and in many stages you will be warped back to your own time.

Use a Joystick in Port 2 to control Thunderbolt and in emergencies press SPACE to activate an energy flash.
