

NEVIRAPINE PLUGS IN 'THE CONSTANT GARDENER' MOVIE

The screenplay by Jeffrey Caine, incorporates the marketing propaganda theme that corrupt, inefficient African governments are failing to provide it*

You've met Dr. Ngaba, have you?

Yes, at the opening of a new state-of-the-art clinic... without autoclaves for sterilizing. Mmm.

Probably converted them into a Mercedes.

Hmm.

I've never met an alchemist before.

Tessa, darling.

Ah, Tessa.

Hello, Porter.

May I introduce Tessa Quayle, Dr. Ngaba, the wife of our representative for aid effectiveness?

Pleasure to meet you.

How do you do?

And this is Dr. Bluhm from Médecins dans l'univers. Good evening.

Dr. Bluhm and I have met.

Yes, it was at the opening for the clinic that didn't have the sterilizing equipment.

We never met, Dr. Ngaba, but I know your work.

[...]

You were going to show us the garden room, Porter.

There is just one thing that I'd like to thank Dr. Ngaba for – the free nevirapine.

He's, uh, persuaded the manufacturers to donate it to H.I. V. - positive mothers.

It's a wonderful thing.

Shall we?

The problem is, it isn't actually reaching them. Some, but not all.

So we've been wondering, is that a standard cock-up, Dr. Ngaba, or – or were the pills converted into the limo that you arrived in?

What did you give her, Arnold?

Nevirapine. The government clinic didn't have any again.

Jomo.

Yes, Mama Tessa?

Have you had your test yet?

No.

Jomo.

If she's H.I.V. Positive, chances are you are too.
