Appeal Court deals with Unlawful Sexual Intercourse Case

The Court of Appeal has met to decide a case involving Ryan Strachan who was sentenced by a high court judge in 2023 in connection with unlawful sexual intercourse with a minor.

At the sentencing hearing, the judge imposed a sentence of 7 years and 9 months' imprisonment on each count to be served consecutively.

In effect, the aggregate sentence imposed on Strachan was 15 years and 6 months' imprisonment.

Defense attorney-at-law Jerry Edwin filed an appeal before the Justices of Appeal and the matter was heard by Mde. Esco L. Henry, Mde. Nicola Byer and the Hon. Mr. Gerard St. C. Farara.

Female attorney-at-law Crisan Greenidge, the Senior Crown Counsel in the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions appeared for the State.

Following is the ruling of the Court of Appeal Justices:-

Hon. Mr. Gerard St. C. Farara

Criminal Procedure Code, 13 govern the preliminary inquiry and commitment of an accused for trial. Section 115 of the Criminal Procedure Code further provides that, except where the charge is one of high treason, murder or manslaughter, an accused who admits his guilt during the preliminary inquiry and indicates that he does not wish the witnesses to appear again at trial may be committed by the magistrate for sentence rather than for trial. This does not, however, amount to the formal entry of a guilty plea before the magistrate, since section 119 requires an indictment to be preferred and the accused to be called upon to plead to it in the Supreme Court. Section 125 also permits an accused who has already been committed for trial to file written notice with the Registrar of his intention to plead guilty and to be sentenced before the next regular session of the court. Therefore, although the legislation provided mechanisms by which the appellant could have indicated his guilt before his arraignment in the High Court, the learned judge did not identify whether the appellant had failed to avail himself of any of those mechanisms or establish that, having regard to the manner in which the appellant's case proceeded through the Magistrate's Court, they had in fact been available to him.

[60] I therefore find that there was no good or sufficient reason provided by the learned judge why the appellant should not have been given the full discount applicable and as I am satisfied that the one third discount should have been applied to the notional sentence of 14 years 9 months.

[61] I therefore set aside the entire sentence of the learned judge and in this re-sentencing exercise, find that the appellant should be sentenced to 9 years 10 months on both the 1st and 2nd counts.

[62] In coming to this determination, the next consideration must be the principle of totality and the imposition of concurrent or consecutive sentences where there has been more than one occurrence of the complained offence. In this appeal, apart from the mathematical calculations that were undertaken by the learned trial judge, this is the major complaint of the appellant.

Totality of Sentence

[63] The starting point for any court when considering whether there should be the imposition of a consecutive or concurrent sentence are the Eastern Caribbean Supreme Court (Sentencing Guidelines) Rules 2019, Practice Direction 8A No 1 of 2019 – General Sentencing Principles ("Practice Direction 8A").

[64] Under paragraph 3 of Practice Direction 8A, it is stated at 3.1 that:

"The principle of totality requires a court, when sentencing for more than one offence to pass a sentence that reflects the total criminality but which is just and proportionate so that the sentence does not exceed what is necessary to reflect the overall offending behaviour. This principle applies regardless of whether the offences form a single episode of criminality or two or more acts of criminality."

Therefore, as stated at 3.3:

"The court's first task is to consider the appropriate sentence for each individual offence applying the relevant guideline. Secondly it must decide whether the sentences should be made to run concurrently or consecutively. Finally, the court will then assess the overall sentence for justness and proportionality adjusting the sentence accordingly."

[65] In determining whether the sentence given to an offender should run consecutively or concurrently to reflect the totality principle, paragraph 5 of Practice Direction 8A gives further guidance. By paragraph 5.1, the court considers that where more than one offence is committed in the course of the same transaction or arises out of the same incident or facts, the general rule is that the sentences are to run concurrently with each other and where the offences are of a similar nature and were committed over a short period of time against the same victim sentences should normally be made to run concurrently. In relation to whether consecutive sentences are more appropriate Practice Direction 8A at paragraph 5.3 notes that consecutive sentences may be appropriate in principle where the offences were committed on separate occasions or were committed when the offender was on bail for other offences for which he was eventually convicted or in cases involving a firearm. However, in any event whether a concurrent or a consecutive sentence is imposed is in the discretion of the sentencing judge as they take into consideration the totality principle of what sentence adequately reflects the offence of which the offender was convicted.

[66] In the case under appeal, the sentencing judge at paragraph [62] of her decision asked herself the important question of whether the sentence for one of the offences of which the appellant was convicted could "comprehend and reflect the criminality of the other offences". In answering this question, she had this to say at paragraph [63]:

"Given the nature and circumstances of the of the convict's crime being of such a sordid sexual nature, the use of the internet to commit these crimes and the dominant role that blackmail/ the threat of sextortion played in their commission, the Court will impose a consecutive sentence even though the incident was committed against the same individual. The Court believes that such a sentence is just and proportionate, reflects all the offending behaviour of the convict and speaks to the need for deterrence to the convict and potential offenders."

[67] The main complaint of the appellant as to the imposition of the consecutive sentence is that the learned judge failed to consider section 80(1) of the Criminal Code. Section 80(1) provides the following:

"...where a person does several acts against or in respect of one person or thing, each of which acts is a crime but the whole of which acts are done in execution of the same design and in the opinion of the Court before which the person is tried, form one continuous transaction the person may be punished for the whole of such acts as one crime or for any one or several of such acts as one crime and all the acts may be taken into consideration in awarding punishment but he or she shall not be liable to separate punishments as for several crimes..." (emphasis added)

[68] The appellant's contention is that while section 80(1) contains the totality principle it prohibits separate punishments for what can be considered one continuous transaction. In his submission, he maintains that since the feature of the offences which supported the imposition of consecutive sentence was what the learned judge termed 'sextortion', this had already been considered and adopted earlier in the sentencing exercise which had taken the offence into the

The Nomination Day scenario!!!

One Opposition Candidate Comes under the Microscope

Grenada's Supervisor of Election Arthur Pierre has said that he is seeking legal advice on the Nomination papers filed on Thursday by Adrian Joseph, the opposition New National Party (NNP) Candidate for the St George North-west constituency.

Pierre made the statement when questioned by THE NEW TODAY hours after the Electoral Office received the Nomination Papers of Joseph and other candidates who are contesting the November 5 General Election.

He said he would seek legal advice on the issue even if Joseph reportedly submitted his letter of resignation to the Public Service Commission (PSC) 24-hours before Nomination Day.

"I am just telling you that as it relates to how I treat with the issue of the Candidates and their nominees and their declarations I am seeking legal advice – that is as much as I could say for now," he said.

Joseph stepped down as Clerk of Parliament in March but did not immediately tender his resignation from the Public Service.

There are reports that the NNP Candidate for St George North-west was trying to get his two stints in the Public Service joined together in order to qualify for a Pension.

However, he did not get it and was forced to submit his resignation letter Wednesday in order to try and qualify to be a candidate for the opposition NNP in the general election which is less than three weeks away.

Under the Representation of the People Act, a candidate has to state categorically, "I am not the holder of a public Office."

Joseph joined the public service first as a Driver and then came back later after engaging in some studies to pass some O'level subjects to occupy positions such as Chief of Protocol and then Acting Clerk of Parliament.

The NNP Candidate was on the campaign trail for the past seven months while still holding a position within the Public Service.

According to a high-level public officer, if the PSC goes by the book on the Adrian Joseph resignation then he might be disqualified from taking part in the Nomination process on the grounds that he needs to give one month's notice of his intention to officially quit his position.

"He resigned as of yesterday (Wednesday). He was there playing hard ball," he quipped.

"If I was in the Public Service Commission I wasn't going to accept his letter of resignation just so. I would tell him that he has to give one month's notice – that is the law," he said.

However, the source pointed out that the PSC can use its discretion to waive the required one month's notice for Joseph.

Another high-level public officer feared that Joseph received "bad legal advice" on the manner in which he did not submit his resignation letter for months but was holding out with the hope of getting his years of service joined in order to qualify for a pension.

He explained the process that had to be used in order to join Joseph's service.

He said: "The joining of the service is not really a government issue. The Governor-General is the only authority that could join service but somebody has to initiate it like the Cabinet Secretary or the (CPO) Chief Personnel Officer in the Public Service Commission. Somebody has to initiate it and get it to the Governor-General for consideration."

Joseph is contesting the seat which was held for an unbroken 42 years in Parliament by the 80-year old Keith Mitchell, the former Prime Minister and Political Leader of NNP who is no longer seeking public office after his loss at the polls in 2022 to Dickon Mitchell of the Congress party.

Electoral Office to Release names Friday of all Candidates

Grenadians will know sometime today the full list of persons nominated to contest the November 5 general election, according to Supervisor of Elections Arthur Pierre.

Speaking to THE NEW TODAY on Thursday, Pierre said that some of the Registration Officers especially from the out parishes took a very long time to bring down their papers to the main office at Tanteen, St George's.

He stated that a lot of in-house work has to be done in order to release the names of all the candidates.

The ruling National Democratic Congress (NDC) of Prime Minister Dickon Mitchell and the main opposition New National Party (NNP) were expected to submit a full slate of candidates for all fifteen constituencies on the island.

There are reports that the newly formed Democratic People's Movement (DPM) of Peter David was only contesting nine seats in the election due in another three weeks.

The election is expected to see some close battles in several constituencies.

The most looked forward contest is in the rural St Andrew South-east seat in which the incumbent Emmalin Pierre, the NNP Political Leader is facing a stiff challenge from Education Minister David Andrew of the Congress party.

Pierre has been telling Executive members that she is "safe" but the Andrew Camp believes that they have secured enough votes to topple the female NNP Boss.

Pierre defeated Andrew by just over 200 votes in the 2022 general election but the senior government minister is said to be making significant inroads through several projects undertaken in Telescope, the biggest Polling Division in the constituency.

Another battle that is generating a great deal of interest is in rural St Mark in which two newcomers – Dr Myanna Charles (NNP) and former Acting School Principal Caris DeGannes (NDC) are facing each other in a constituency considered as "a garrison" for the opposition.

Congress supporters believe that DeGannes can close the gap of about 450 votes that NNP's Dr Clarice Modeste-Curwen won the seat by in 2022 against NDC's Quinc Britton.

It's now 21 days before the November 5 General Election.

The two main parties – the ruling National Democratic Congress (NDC) under the leadership of Prime Minister Dickon Mitchell and the New National Party (NNP), now headed by Emmalin Pierre – will be looking at its best chances of getting the required eight seats to form the new government.

The other main party involved in the race is the Democratic People's Movement (DPM) of former NNP and NDC Executive member Peter David.

At this stage, THE NEW TODAY is seeing a much clearer path to victory for Congress than the NNP which has been the dominant party in electoral politics in the country for the past 40 years.

The NNP is under new leadership with the departure of former Prime Minister Keith Mitchell not to contest his St George North-west seat which he has held in Parliament since 1984.

The party has been affected in recent years by a split in its rank as several members including David have departed to form DPM.

David has left with a number of key prominent persons who campaigned for NNP over the years – Dr. Bert Brathwaite, Dr. Anthony Bridgeman, Arley Gill, Archie Bain, Chester Humphrey and Pastor Stanford Simon among others.

EDITORIAL

A Difficult Path for NNP!!!

Another major loss for NNP came a few months after the 2022 general election when the elected Member of Parliament for the rural St Andrew North-west Constituency Delma Thomas defected to Congress and now holds the position of Minister of Mental Health and Sports.

And two weeks ago, former NNP Finance Minister Anthony Boatwain appeared on the NDC platform at the Bus Terminal in Sauteurs to publicly endorse NDC's Foreign Affairs Minister Joseph Andall who is defending his St Patrick West seat against NNP's Jelani Glean.

Ex-Prime Minister Keith Mitchell understands the fracture within his party when he told supporters some months ago that a vote for DPM on Polling

Day is a vote for NDC.

The DPM might not win any seats in the election but has the potential to take away some NNP votes in a few key and strategic rural constituencies like St Patrick East, St Patrick West, St Andrew North-east, and St Andrew South-east.

The DPM's best chances at the poll rests in the hands of its leader Peter David who is defending the Town of St George Constituency which he won in 2003 and 2008 as a member of NDC and in 2018 and 2022 with NNP.

There is a feeling that David along with NDC's Claudette Joseph are the main contenders in this election cycle for the seat in the City and not NNP's Troy Noel, a newcomer to the political landscape and one who has remained unknown and has failed to captivate the electorate.

Regional Pollster Peter Wickham of Barbados has already declared that Prime Minister Dickon Mitchell is in Pole position going into the November 5 election given the split in the ranks of the NNP since the last general election.

For the first time, the NDC is facing the electorate not dogged by bitter political infighting like in 1995 and 2008, equipped with a Political Leader and Prime Minister who is very popular at the moment and considered to be better suited to sit in the important chair on the Sixth Floor of the Ministerial Complex at the Botanical Gardens than his opponent Emmalin Pierre who is not seen as a national political figure.

THE NEW TODAY believes that the NNP should pay close attention to Sunday's National rally by Congress at the Car Park of the Stadium at Queen's Park.

It is generally agreed that crowds do not determine the final outcome of an election but the NDC is hoping to use the rally to gain a decisive momentum to head into the NNP heartland of St Andrew for what is being billed as "The Mother of All Rallies" on October 26 at Pearl's airstrip.

If Congress wins two of the 4 seats in St Andrew then it can spell Doomsday for NNP and its chances of getting 8 seats on Election Day to form the new government in the tri-island State.

The NNP is starting off the campaign with a major disadvantage as it has literally surrendered 4 of the 5 seats in the Parish of St George to its opponents and is competitive only in St George North-west of its former leader.

The task ahead for the NNP is to win 7 of the remaining 10 seats at stake on Election Day including that of Prime Minister Dickon Mitchell in St David.

One day can turn out to be a very long 24-hours in politics and many things can go wrong for an incumbent in office but the NNP will have to sweep the entire Western flank of the island and also St Andrew to be in the electoral race.

And it has to do that with a team of candidates considered to be among the weakest ever on the NNP ticket since the formation of the party in 1984 on Union Island in the Grenadines with the full backing of the U.S government then President Ronald Reagan.

The NNP is also affected by widespread reports of sizable defection of its supporters to Congress in several constituencies in the past month.

The under-prepared Emmalin Pierre does not seem to have the political skills to stop the bleeding that is taking place almost daily in the party and that only serves to strengthen the hands of Prime Minister Dickon Mitchell and Congress on Polling Day.

The NNP has a lot of work to do in the remaining three weeks of the campaign to rescue its ship in order to avoid another 5 years in the political wilderness in the country.

DPM's ferry link plan to Carriacou & calls for Winston Thomas memorial

As general election draws closer and the tussle for votes continue, candidates of the Democratic People's Movement are insisting that the newly formed party of Peter David has the best plans for moving Grenada forward and are also drawing attention to several things that should be done, including establishing a memorial in honour of the late Dr Winston Thomas.

DPM's Dishon Edwards said his plans for St. Patrick East - where he is The Movement's candidate - include building at least three public playgrounds across the constituency in his first year as MP, placing children's recreational needs among his immediate priorities.

He also is proposing a ferry link from northern Grenada to Carriacou and the Grenadines, arguing that improved harbour facilities could make travel easier for residents, while bringing jobs and business opportunities to the Parish of St Patrick.

In support of the proposed ferry link service, Edwards is calling for funding to complete the original St Patrick break-water development project and for harbour improvement in the parish.

"We should have access to the Grenadines from St Patrick", said Edwards, questioning the current arrangement of requiring northern residents having to travel to St. George's to board a ferry that subsequently passes St Patrick - the area they have just left - as the boat makes its way to Carriacou.

"If you stand on the jetty in St Patrick, you watch the Osprey go up every afternoon and go down," he said, describing the arrangement as "ridiculous".

Edwards acknowledged that developing the waterfront would take time and need financing, but said the proposal should form part of a broader effort to strengthen the northern economy.

"We cannot just centralise everything in St George's," said Edwards. "We want some things in the north. We want something to pull persons from the south to the north."

The proposed ferry connection complements his plans to develop and market St Patrick heritage and natural attractions, encourage visitors to spend more time in the parish, and expand employment opportunities for residents.

Edwards said stronger transport connections and better local services could help create the economic activity needed to support businesses and improve livelihoods.

"Training is needed beforehand so that when the jobs become available, it's not people coming from outside to take it," he said.

Edwards and the entire slate of DPM candidates - including Political Leader Peter David and Deputy

The late Dr Winston Thomas

Arley Gill - are engaged in intense campaigning, meeting voters nightly in the various constituencies.

In addition to David, Gill and Edwards, The Movement also has Rolanda McQueen running in St Andrew South East, Olive Holas in St Andrew North West, Andy Best in St Patrick West, Pamela Williams in St Andrew North East, Stanford Simon in St George South East and Charmaine Gibbs is DPM's candidate for St George South.

"We have a wonderful group of hardworking candidates and we're in this to win," said David, who is seeking re-election as Member of Parliament for the Town of St George.

"Brothers and Sisters, we have achieved a lot in Town," David told constituents at a recent community meeting.

"Thank you for your support over the years. I am particularly inspired by the many people in the Town of St George who have succeeded and remained in the Town of St George," added David, who outlined many projects that he pioneered and obtained funding to complete, including a new wing at the General Hospital.

"I call on the government of Grenada," said David, "to rename that emergency wing of the hospital as the Dr Winston Thomas Casualty Department."

Thomas, a Cuba-trained medical doctor, died July 27, 2019.

Edwards, speaking at his

candidate launch in Rose Hill, challenged residents to consider where parents in St Patrick could take their children to enjoy basic playground facilities, including swings and slides.

"In the first year, you will see at least three public playgrounds across St. Patrick," Edwards promised.

He presented the commitment as a practical response to what he described as years of inadequate attention to children's recreational needs.

His proposal covers the wider parish, including communities in both St Patrick East and West.

"I'm not talking five-year plans, I'm talking one-year plan," he said, emphasising that residents should expect tangible improvements early in his term as MP.

An educator with a background in community sports, Edwards linked the playground pledge to a broader call for better facilities and opportunities for young people.

He also raised concerns about the condition of the Rose Hill basketball court, pointing out that meaningful support for sports requires maintaining spaces where young people can train and develop their abilities.

"It is high time that when we speak of Saint Patrick's East, we can be happy with the person representing us," he told supporters.

Don't be afraid or sorry saying it!!!

As an adjective "Derelict" can mean abandoned, given up upon or forsaken by the natural owner or guardian of a product, thing or person.

Harsh words if you are referring to those folks that accost us each day on the sidewalks, alleyways and road intersections of the City. These are those people who sleep on benches in the park, create corrugated or ramshackle shelters in all sorts of weather.

These people may be addicts, homeless, mentally challenged or financially oppressed (they have no money except what the government gives them). They scavenge about, steal products and things that belong to others and often poison themselves with cheap booze or narcotics. They are often treated like garbage, so they will often treat themselves just so.

Am I victim blaming? Hell no. Am I calling them names, demeaning them in any way? No. they do that to themselves easily enough. Now if you have never dealt with these "Derelict" then what I am writing is outrageous and an attack upon innocents right?

Well I have worked with such "clients" in New York City, Washington DC and Toronto as well as in rural areas where unemployment is rampant. Oh you did not know that? Yes the Midwest of Canada and US are spotted with small towns and communities suffering from unemployment, misrepresentation and social shaming.

The Mountain People of Pennsylvania and Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky, through Georgia into Missouri know what it is like to live in economically depressed regions. These communities have those who are wealthy, middle class, working class and those who have nothing at all. The American and Canadian Caste System at work.

Many of our "derelicts" come from rural areas only to transport themselves to the big city looking for jobs and opportunity. Some do not find a place in the city, nor employment or family. Society often attempts to forget or alienate these folks, after all they accomplish little and make no financial contribution to society.

They become "Derelict", abandoned by others, ignored while receiving society's scraps of privilege and often turn upon themselves. Suicide, self-abuse, addiction all are here.

Society tries to help but in the process does nothing but enable these folks in their troubles. Injection sites disallow "professionals" from counseling these folks while allowing them to continue their addiction practices "in a safe place".

They are given rooms they often trash, bunk bed with other "derelicts" allowing for social and personal disagreements to develop. To protect their privacy the authorities do not police them, so drug dealing persists in the shelters and community centers.

Do I feel sorry for these people? No I do not. They are often there because of bad choices made by them, their families or employers. Instead of challenging their situation they often run away both spiritually and personally. They give up. Some die on the streets, or in shelters due to the weather, crime or drug habits.

Many prove they are incapable of caring for themselves let alone their families. Society needs to take direct action and this action needs to be life affirming severe.

*May I suggest a solution? It will not be acceptable to either left or right politically. Mental illness is prevalent everywhere be it in homes, schools, businesses or on the streets.

Our public authority does not wish to challenge this particular pandemic of mental illness because the cure will challenge the so-called victim's personal freedoms and place financial burdens upon the public authorities (tax payers) to do something about it.

Cowardly lions who talk the talk but will not walk the walk of public safety. Anyone who lives outside when it is neg 30-40 degrees and is not in a shelter is mentally ill. Why? Because they are suicidal, and suicide is a criminal practice frowned upon by all of us. So if these people are suicidal in practice the police should be able to carry them off not to jail but to a place of safety.

Now this is where Conservatives and penny pinching Businesses will complain. These Derelicts must be sent to prepared social centers (that exist) where they can be interviewed, medically checked, fed, given a place to bed down. Psychologists, social workers and addiction counselors employed by the City/Province can assess each individual in turn directing them to rehab, education training, skill training or hospitals should they require healthcare attention.

So apply the "Big Stick", open society's hearts and minds to these people and hope for the best while always preparing for the worst.

This program is similar to ones enacted today in the EU, Israel and China. All society has to do is deal with this privacy issue by answering the question "should we stop and help someone in need or allow them to work it out for themselves?"

Often the individual may be in need of severely empathetic public action, strong arming necessary for their own good. Poverty and social exclusion need not be accepted socially as it has been for centuries.

Folks, what is better, a person who can contribute to society or having to uplift someone continually due to unresolved problems and mental injuries?

Save a life through a transformational process offered by the public authority or willfully accepting that a person can choose to destroy themselves through addiction, financial mischief and mental illness.

Choose wisely.

Now we the people know the candidates and the election date. The campaign is "heating up" as these candidates seek to convince we the people why we should vote for their party/for them.

Permit me to share the following observations/queries/comments with you

Last Minute Candidates: Why are certain candidates being chosen almost last minute by their party?

St. Andrew's North-east: Mr. Roderick St. Clair was the Senator representing the Agriculture, Fisheries and related sector in the Senate. One was aware that Mr. St. Clair engaged his constituents (the stakeholders of the sector he represented) and one could look forward to his informed presentations in the Senate.

He has also done significant work in respect of value added products from various parts of the nutmeg and these offers enhance the agri-tours offered in Beaulieu and Victoria, St. Mark's.

Mr. St. Clair entered the NDC race to represent the North-east St. Andrew's constituency. Has Mr. St. Clair taken some time off from his duties as General Manager of the Grenada Co-operative Nutmeg Association?

resenting the NDC?

Destruction of Caribbean Agricultural Research and Development institute (CARDI) Research Station: It is most uncharacteristic that we the people have not heard any statement from the farmers representative, Mr. St. Clair on this matter.

Regional Institution: CARDI is part of a regional institution established in 1975 – 50 years of research work.

Relocation? What is the cost of CARDI's relocation? Where will be its new location?

Replacement: Or will CARDI be shut down to be replaced by the Chinese Agricultural Mission?

Conflict of Interest: Was Mr. St. Clair's duty/interest to represent the farmers' interest on this CARDI issue clashing with his interest in becoming an elected Member of Parliament rep-

Burn Pan Scrapings/Scraps Campaign Conduct: He portrays himself as the NDC Campaign Man, the one who feels he could say what he wants, how he wants, when he want. I heard him on his morning programme on Thursday, October 8th describing the Leader of Opposition as the scraps and scrapings that were left at the bottom of the burn pan in reference to her party's decision to choose her as Party Leader.

It is amazing how he spent more than half the time repeating this description of the Leader of the Opposition.

Gutter Level: It is amazing that in 2026 that some in Grenada, in the NDC party, should find it necessary to DESCEND to this GUTTER level to describe a political adversary and PROUDLY communicate it to the world.

It is also DISRESPECT to we the electorate!! Whatever one thinks of the Leader or the decision-making process of her party, this gutter language is UNACCEPTABLE public campaign conduct.

Party Chairperson/Formal Minister: The Party Chair is a woman and also former Minister. We the people recall her efforts and focus during her tenure to advance the cause of women in Grenada – gender equality and equity; economic empowerment; protection from violence – among other priorities. What an embarrassment!

* Earlier this year, in May 2026, at the 40th Assembly of Delegates, the Party Chair/then Minister, was elected to be one of the three Vice Presidents to lead the Inter-American Commission of Women (CIM) of the Organisation of American States (OAS) for the 2026-2029 period.

* Is this how her party is presenting itself? She has a LOT of work to do!!

Harvey Law Group Reviews Grenada High Court Ruling on Citizenship Rights for Spouses of CBI Citizens

The judgment clarifies that spouses may qualify for Grenadian CBI even if they married before their partner acquired citizenship through investment

MIAMI, FL, UNITED STATES - A recent judgment of the High Court of Justice in Grenada has clarified how the country's constitutional citizenship provisions apply to spouses of people who obtained Grenadian citizenship through the Citizenship by Investment (CBI) Programme.

The Court confirmed that citizenship obtained through Grenada's CBI legislation remains citizenship of Grenada and that the route through which a person became a citizen does not, by itself, prevent their spouse from relying on the separate constitutional citizenship route under section 98 of the Constitution.

The ruling may be particularly relevant to couples who were already married before one spouse obtained Grenadian citizenship through investment.

The case concerned a couple who married on Aug. 27, 1999. More than two decades later, on Oct. 23, 2023, the husband obtained Grenadian citizenship through the country's CBI Programme. His wife subsequently applied for Grenadian citizenship under section 98 of the Constitution and section 5(3) of the Citizenship Act.

The Ministry of Home Affairs declined to process her application through that route. Its position was that applications under section 98 were only processed where the marriage took place after the applicant's spouse had become a Grenadian citizen. Because the couple had married before the husband acquired Grenadian citizenship, the wife was directed towards the CBI framework instead.

Harvey Law Group represented the claimant in the judicial review proceedings in Keturah Heather James v. The Ministry of Home Affairs, Claim No. GDAHCV2024/0401, before the High Court of Justice in Grenada.

The judgment was delivered on Oct. 7, 2026. The High Court rejected the interpretation that the timing of the marriage prevented the claimant from relying on section 98.

Section 98 provides a constitutional route through which a person married to a Grenadian citizen may apply, in the prescribed manner, to be registered as a citizen of Grenada.

The Court found that the provision does not state that the marriage must have taken place after the Grenadian spouse acquired citizenship.

ship does not, by itself, prevent the other spouse from seeking to rely on section 98.

The ruling may also be relevant to prospective CBI applicants and their families when considering how an application should be structured. Where one spouse obtains Grenadian citizenship through investment, the other spouse's potential citizenship options may not necessarily be limited to inclusion within the original CBI application or a subsequent CBI-based process. The appropriate route will depend on the circumstances of the family and the applicable legal requirements.

Importantly, the judgment does not mean that every spouse of a Grenadian citizen will automatically be registered as a citizen under section 98. The Court's decision was narrower. It determined that the claimant could not be excluded from the section 98 route because her husband had obtained his citizenship through the CBI Programme or because their marriage took place before he became a Grenadian citizen.

Applications remain subject to the applicable constitutional and legal requirements and must be considered according to their individual circumstances.

In this case, the Court quashed the Ministry's decision and ordered it to process and determine the claimant's application in accordance with the law. The judgment did not itself grant the claimant Grenadian citizenship.

The decision also provides wider clarification on the status of citizenship acquired through investment. The Court confirmed that citizenship obtained through Grenada's CBI legislation remains citizenship of Grenada.

The constitutional rights available to a Grenadian citizen are therefore not displaced simply because citizenship was originally acquired through the CBI Programme.

For Grenadian CBI citizens, their spouses and prospective applicants considering the programme, the judgment provides greater clarity on how the CBI framework operates alongside the constitutional citizenship route available to spouses under Grenadian law.

Harvey Law Group represented the claimant in the judicial review proceedings, with Managing Solicitor Steven Corbin acting as counsel.

Consequence -Category 1. In the appellant's view, taking it into consideration again to impact the totality principle amounted to double counting. The respondent's counter to this argument was that while the offences involved the same offender and victim, the offences which the appellant was convicted of occurred on two separate occasions, in two different months nor did the two sexual acts form one continuous transaction. Rather the appellant had committed multiple offences of sexual intercourse with a minor and thus the provisions of section 80 were inapplicable. The court in considering the overall criminality of the case had to take into account that sextortion was a key element in the commission of the offences and did not amount to double counting as alleged by the appellant. The imposition of the consecutive sentences by the learned judge, in the submission of the respondent, was therefore just proportionate and appropriate to the circumstances of the case.

[69] In considering the submissions of both the appellant and the respondent, I need to remind myself that:

"The sentence imposed upon a convicted person should ultimately be neither too harsh nor too lenient. It must be proportionate. The totality principle requires that when a judge sentences an offender for more than a single offence the judge must give a sentence that reflects all the offending behaviour that is before the court. But this is subject to the notion that ultimately the total or overall sentence must be just and proportionate. This remains the case whether the individual sentences are structured to be served concurrently or consecutively."

[70] Thus, if a sentencing judge is minded to impose a consecutive sentence, then it must be that there was more than simply undertaking an arithmetic exercise. There must be due consideration of what they are trying to achieve in relation to the punishment and the offences for which that convicted person stands to be sentenced.

[71] In addition to this general principle, this case also raises the specific application of section 80(1) of the Criminal Code. It is clear from the sentencing judgment of the learned trial judge that there is no indication that she considered the applicability or non-applicability of section 80(1) to the appellant in her sentencing exercise.

There having been no mention, it is a reasonable inference that she had not considered its implication for the circumstances of this case. In that regard, I consider that this failure on the part of the learned judge to address her mind to section 80(1) amounts to a fundamental flaw in her sentencing exercise which invites appellate review.

[72] Like the case before me, this Court in Garfield Clement had to consider the interpretation of section 80 and how the same should be applied in circumstances where there had also been multiple counts of sexual impropriety by the same offender against the same victim.

[73] At paragraph [41] thereof, the Court after considering the interpretation of similar words as contained in section 80(1) from two other jurisdictions stated this:

"The expression 'one continuous transaction' is not to be approached with undue rigidity. It calls for a practical, fact-sensitive assessment, guided by common sense and directed to the justice of the case. The authorities indicate that proximity of time, place, conduct and purpose are important considerations. They are not, however, conclusive or exhaustive. It requires a court to determine whether, taken together and in their proper context, the acts complained of form a single, continuous course of criminal conduct. The mere presence of a common complainant or even a common general criminal intent is not without more, sufficient to conclude that offences form part of a continuous transaction. A court must be satisfied that the offences are linked in time, place, purpose and execution that they properly form part of a single, uninterrupted course of conduct." (emphasis added)

[74] In Garfield Clement, this Court found that the offences were committed against the same complainant but over a period of 4 years. This Court therefore considered that in that instance the determination of the learned trial judge that the sentences should run consecutively was not plainly wrong and did not interfere with the sentence that had been imposed.

[75] In the case of Linton Pompey v The Director of Public Prosecutions the Caribbean Court of Justice offered some guidance for trial judges when considering the totality of sentencing and although it is acknowledged that in the context of Grenada such advice is only persuasive, it is in my mind something that can be well considered.

Her Ladyship, The Hon. Justice Esco L. Henry

ered. In that particular case, the apex court was considering an appeal from the Court of Appeal of Guyana where the appellant had been sentenced to 37 years for the rape and sexual activity with a minor, the niece of his common law wife. In considering the 37 years that was imposed to be excessive (the trial judge having not, in their opinion adequately considered the principle of totality), the court set aside the consecutive nature of the sentences and ordered that the same were to be served concurrently.

[76] In doing so at paragraph [33] the court offered this guidance:

"So far as totality principle is concerned, in cases where it is necessary to sentence someone for multiple serious offences, before pronouncing sentence the judge should:

(a) Consider what is an appropriate sentence for each individual offence;

(b) Ask one self whether such sentences as served concurrently, the total length of time the prisoner will serve appropriately reflects the full seriousness of his overall criminality;

(c) If the answer to (b) above is Yes then the sentences should be made to run concurrently. If the answer is No and it is felt that justice requires a longer period of incarceration so that the sentences should run consecutively, test the overall sentence against the requirement that it be just and proportionate;

(d) If upon having the sentences run consecutively, the total prison time to be served is not just and proportionate (as in Pompey's case where it yielded an excessive 37 years sentence) go back to the drawing board and consider structuring the sentence in a different fashion bearing uppermost in mind the totality principle. This restructuring exercise might be achieved by lowering the individual sentences and retaining their consecutive character or by altering the individual sentences (in particular the most serious one) and having the sentences run concurrently;

(e) Finally, carefully explain the rationale for the sentence and its structure in a way that will be best understood by the parties and the public."

[77] Even though that guidance was given in the context of an absence of structured guidelines in Guyana while this Court has had these in place for many years, I do not think that the importance of those words in that guidance can at all be minimized.

[78] Thus, in considering the present case, each offence by recalculation would have garnered a tariff of 9 years 10 months. Unlike the Garfield Clement case the time between the offences was a matter of weeks not years. It was clear that the offender engaged in a campaign against this complainant to continue to have inappropriate sexual contact with her until it came to a stop. Further, both offences occurred at the same premises- the residence of the complainant's mother and the assignments were all conducted via social media. In the round, as egregious as these offences were, it cannot be denied that the offences are in fact captured by section 80(1) as "one continuous transaction". In my mind the appellant being incarcerated for a period of 9 years and 10 months taking him to the age in the region of 34/35 when he is released and re-enters society would have had the result of depriving him of his youth and be just and proportionate in the circumstances.

[79] I am satisfied that not only was the notional sentence incorrectly calculated by the learned judge but that the direction that the sentences (even wrongly calculated) should run consecutively was also vitiated by an error of principle and there is a proper basis for this Court to interfere in the sentence.

Disposition

[80] For the reasons set out above, I would make the following orders:

- (1) The appeal is allowed.
- (2) The appellant's sentences of 7 years 9 months to be served consecutively is set aside.
- (3) On the 1st count, the sentence is substituted to a sentence of 9 years 10 months imprisonment.
- (4) On the 2nd count, the sentence is substituted to a sentence of 9 years 10 months imprisonment.
- (5) The sentences shall run concurrently.

I concur.

NNP Launches 'Better Grenada' Campaign

The opposition New National Party (NNP) of Emmalin Pierre on Sunday launched its "Better Grenada" campaign for the November 5 general election.

Speaking at a mass rally held at the Car Park of the National Sporting Stadium at Queen's Park, Pierre, a former Minister of Education, told party supporters to remain focused on winning at the polls to bring down the ruling National Democratic Congress (NDC) of Prime Minister Dickon Mitchell.

"Don't mind the bribery and propaganda, I say one thing to you, stay focus and mind your business until 6.00 p.m. on the Fifth of November when Grenada will see a new government, when Grenada will see a party and a government that is formed among the people of this country," she said.

Pierre's NNP has also faced allegations of bribery.

One resident in her rural St Andrew South-east constituency has alleged that they have "resorted to paying bills for folks in South-east" such is the Leader of NNP Emmalin Pierre - addressing supporters at the rally last Sunday at the Car Park of the National Stadium

"desperation."

As an elected Member of Parliament, Pierre was given EC$10, 000.00 a month to spend on projects in her Constituency.

In her address, Pierre promised to cut corporate tax from 28 % to 25 % as well as provide free transportation for students who need assistance, and expand night and weekend bus services.

She claimed that the business tax reduction being given by a NNP administration will give private sector businesses an opportunity to expand their operations, stimulate the economy and create employment.

"We want to be a partner with our business community," she said, while pledging cooperation towards national and economic development.

Pierre, the first woman to lead the NNP into a general election since its formation in August 1984, is promising students free tuition, plus transportation, meal, and uniform assistance, adding that tuition relief alone was insufficient when children could not afford to get to school.

"We're going to work with the Bus Association, and we are going to find a formula together so that we can run a proper pilot project for free transportation for students who need that support," the NNP leader said.

Pierre is also promising to strengthen "safe, reliable, and dependable transportation at nights and on weekends," noting that inadequate services should not prevent rural residents from accepting hotel jobs in the South of the island.

Other proposals included a medical card providing free doctor visits and basic prescription medication, solar farms across Grenada, Carriacou and Petite Martinique, and a dedicated fund to assist farmers affected by praedial larceny.

The NNP boss is also

Supporters came out in their numbers for the rally held last Sunday promising elderly citizens that it will work with the National Insurance Scheme (NIS) to allow workers to retire between 60 and 65.

"We're not going to force them to stay up to 65," she remarked.

According to Pierre, a government formed by NNP after the national poll will invest aggressively in solar farms across the country to bring down electricity costs and ease the burden on Grenadian families as well as adjusting the increase in the monthly personal income tax threshold from EC$3,000 to EC$6,000, remove Value Added Tax (VAT) on electricity and sugar, abolition of the water levy and tax exemptions for tips, gratuities and bonuses.

"When we launch the manifesto, we will tell you how we intend to fund the Better Grenada plan," she told supporters, as she also pledged to accelerate oil and gas exploration and development in order to deliver benefits throughout the country.

The NNP rally also saw former Prime Minister Keith Mitchell delivering a brief address in which he stated that the "NNP is bringing Pierre pressure" to the campaign.

Former St George North-east Member of Parliament for NNP, Tobias Clement also appeared on the platform and indicated that he had heeded the call made a few years ago by Keith Mitchell "for Toby to come back home."

Clement charged that Mitchell had cleaned the house of certain persons that he had admitted into the NNP fold.

This is a clear reference to left-leaning politician Peter David who joined NNP after he was expelled from Congress in 2012 following a failed attempt to wrest the party and government from then Prime Minister Tillman Thomas.

David had served as Foreign Affairs Minister and Minister of Agriculture under NNP until he quit the party nearly two years ago after Keith Mitchell attacked him for expressing an interest in becoming the new party boss.

Navigating the Turbulent Waters of Once-in-a-Century Changes

By XUE Junying

The year 2026 saw the unfolding of events that began with U.S. military strikes against Venezuela, resulting in the forced seizure and expulsion of President Maduro and his wife; yet, this was merely the tip of the iceberg amidst profound global changes unseen in a century.

Across the globe, conflicts persist in Iran, Ukraine, Sudan and between Israel and Palestine, geopolitical tensions remain entrenched, and the development divide continues to widen.

Unilateralism and hegemonism are clearly on the rise, and traditional and non-traditional security threats are becoming increasingly intertwined; the international community is confronted with a rare convergence of multiple risks and challenges.

Caribbean nations, including Grenada, are not immune to these trends. Security challenges - ranging from climate-related disasters to issues of economic security and regional security autonomy - demand urgent attention.

Navigating the turbulent waters of this era of profound transformation is a shared challenge for all humanity, including the people of the Caribbean.

The solution proposed by China is the Global Security Initiative (GSI).

(I). Core Concepts of the Global Security Initiative

In April 2022, President Xi Jinping first proposed the Global Security Initiative at the Boao Forum for Asia Annual Conference.

He systematically articulated China's position on fostering shared global security and upholding world peace, advocating for a spirit of solidarity to adapt to a rapidly shifting global landscape and a win-win mindset to address complex, intertwined security challenges.

Since its inception, the GSI has garnered widespread support from the international community, including backing from over 130 countries, regions, and international organisations; its core concepts have been explicitly incorporated into over 140 bilateral and multilateral documents regarding cooperation between China and other nations or international organizations.

The GSI adopts the "six commitments" as its core principles. First, it stays committed to the vision of common, comprehensive, cooperative and sustainable security, emphasising that only security rooted in morality and correct principles is truly solid and enduring.

Secondly, it stays committed to respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all countries, maintaining that countries - regardless of size, strength, or wealth - are equal members of the international community; it asserts that internal affairs brook no interference and opposes the "law of the jungle" and the logic of power politics.

Thirdly, it stays committed to abiding by the purposes and principles of the UN Charter, practicing true multilateralism, firmly upholding the international system with the UN at its core, and opposing any "house rules" or bloc norms that lack UN authorisation and violate the spirit of the UN Charter.

Fourthly, it stays committed to peacefully resolving differences and disputes between countries through dialogue and consultation, recognising that war and sanctions are not fundamental solutions, whereas dialogue and consultation are effective pathways to resolving differences.

Finally, it stays committed to maintaining security in both traditional and non-traditional domains, urging joint responses to regional disputes and global challenges - such as terrorism, climate change, cybersecurity, and biosafety - through multifaceted strategies, comprehensive measures, and improved rules, working together to find long-term solutions.

(II). Practical Significance of the Global Security Initiative

The GSI serves as a vital public good for maintaining world peace and stability; it resonates with the security visions and needs of Caribbean nations, including Grenada.

Caribbean nations, Grenada among them, widely uphold the principle of equality among nations - large and small alike - and have long pursued independent, peaceful development. They stand for multilateralism and oppose external confrontation and military alliances.

This aligns closely with the Initiative's core concepts: respecting national sovereignty and territorial integrity, adhering to the UN Charter and principles, respecting legitimate security concerns, and resolving disputes peacefully through dialogue and consultation.

The Caribbean region is primarily composed of Small Island Developing States. While the risk of traditional military conflict within the region is low, it faces significant non-traditional security pressures - such as climate change, transnational organised crime, and the need for regional security autonomy - that align precisely with the GSI's call to "coordinate security across both traditional and non-traditional domains."

The GSI is not a military alliance but a cooperative platform focused on capacity building. In the realms of climate security and disaster prevention and mitigation, disaster management agencies in China and countries such as Grenada can maintain communication and share expertise on early warning systems and emergency management; cooperation on livelihood projects - such as photovoltaic power and energy storage - can enhance energy stability and improve resilience against risks like droughts and power supply fluctuations caused by the El Niño phenomenon.

Regarding the governance of cross-border crime and the strengthening of law enforcement capabilities, Caribbean nations collectively face challenges such as drug and illegal firearms trafficking; China supports CARICOM-led regional law enforcement cooperation and assists regional states in enhancing their investigative, community policing, and juvenile delinquency prevention capabilities through police training and experience sharing.

On the issue of regional security autonomy, where regional states generally express concern regarding maritime operations by extra-regional powers, the GSI advocates for respect for national sovereignty and non-interference in internal affairs, maintaining that the global security framework should be built through collective consultation among all nations.

China supports the Proclamation of Latin America and the Caribbean as a Zone of Peace and the Declaration of Member States of the Agency for the Prohibition of Nuclear Weapons in Latin America and the Caribbean; it advocates for the peaceful resolution of international disputes and hotspots while opposing the frequent use or threat of force.

Furthermore, China will maintain communication with Caribbean nations - including Grenada - in multilateral forums such as the United Nations to jointly voice the security concerns of small island states.

As a developing country and a member of the Global South, China shares a common destiny with the Global South, including the Caribbean region.

Amidst the turbulent waves of profound global changes, China stands ready to work with Grenada and other Caribbean nations to conduct practical cooperation - based on equality and mutual benefit - in areas such as climate security, disaster prevention and mitigation, the safeguarding of people's well-being, and law enforcement experience sharing.

Together, we could explore viable pathways for Global South countries to achieve the coordinated advancement of security and development, and to contribute to building a balanced, effective, and sustainable global security architecture.

Iranians with passports from Dominica

By Kenneth Rijock

Here are ongoing developments regarding the commercial activities and sanctions-evasion network led by MOHAMMAD HOSSEIN SHAMKHANI.

The organisation is executing a rapid liquidation of its UAE entities, initiating mass terminations of local personnel, and transferring its command structure to China.

Below is a summary of these actions. The Phantom Fleet: Inside the Terrifying Collapse of 'H' and the UAE's Billion-Dollar Shadow Empire.

In the gleaming towers of Dubai, billions of dollars move in total silence. They flow through shell companies, phantom tankers, and offshore hedge funds. But beneath this veneer of corporate legitimacy lies one of the most sophisticated and dangerous sanctions-busting operations in modern history.

At the center of it all is a man known in elite trading circles simply as "H", "Hector", or "Hugo Hayek". His real name is Hossein Shamkhani. As the son of Ali Shamkhani, Iran's powerful former national security chief, Hossein didn't just inherit political connections - he weaponised them to build a staggering global enterprise.

His syndicate - anchored by entities like the Milavous Group and the Admiral Group - controls a massive "shadow fleet" of tankers. This fleet doesn't just smuggle sanctioned Iranian and Russian crude; US officials have linked Shamkhani's maritime network to a terrifying "weapons-for-oil" pipeline, actively transporting drones, missiles, and dual-use components to fuel Russia's war machine.

But the walls are finally closing in. Following crushing sanctions from the United States Treasury and the European Union throughout 2025 and 2026, the Shamkhani syndicate is triggering a drastic, scorched-earth retreat from the Middle East.

What is happening right now in Dubai is not just a corporate restructuring. It is a mass liquidation, a covert exodus, and a chilling reminder of how easily the architects of global conflict can vanish into the dark.

The Corporate Facade: A Masterclass in Deception To evade international intelligence agencies, Shamkhani's network operates through a labyrinth of rapid rebranding, Caribbean passports, and continuous corporate mutation.

When one tentacle is severed by US authorities, two more grow in its place. Take Teodor Shipping L.L.C., a UAE-based vessel management firm explicitly sanctioned by the U.S. Treasury for orchestrating Shamkhani's illicit shipping operations.

To sidestep these penalties, Teodor was simply dissolved and quietly resurrected as Velora Shipping DMCC.

This same shell-game psychology governs the rest of his UAE portfolio: Greenharbour DMCC (Operating from the ashes of Helmatic Consultancy and Marvise Ship Management DMCC).

Source: GFA

The Grenada Football Association (GFA) and title sponsor Beacon Insurance have officially launched the GFA-Beacon Insurance Primary Schools Football Championships 2026, setting the stage for approximately two months of organised competition involving more than 50 primary schools across Grenada, Carriacou and Petite Martinique.

The championships will feature 54 schools in the Boys' Competition and 51 schools in the Girls' Competition, with many participating schools fielding teams in both categories. Competition officially begins on October 14, creating a national platform for young players to represent their schools, develop their football abilities and become more deeply connected to the sport.

The championships were formally launched on Wednesday, October 7, at the GFA Conference Room, bringing together representatives of the GFA, Beacon Insurance, the Ministry of Education, the Grenada Union of Teachers, students and teachers from participating schools, members of the media and other invited stakeholders. The programme featured remarks from education, sport, football and sponsor representatives, followed by an overview of the competition, the formal declaration of the championships, Players' and Coaches' Oaths and a media question-and-answer session.

For the GFA, the championships represent an important entry point into the wider football-development pathway. Primary school competition gives children an early structured environment in which to play, learn and compete while providing coaches and technical personnel with opportunities to observe emerging talent across communities.

Promising players can subsequently progress through grassroots and club football and, where identified, into the GFA's Talent Development Scheme (TDS). The TDS provides structured training at least three times per week for selected players at U13, U14, U15 and U16 levels, helping to bridge the gap between early participation and higher levels of youth development, including future national-team opportunities.

GFA President Marlon Glean, who delivered remarks at the launch, has consistently placed grassroots participation and structured player development among the Association's priorities. "Primary school football is where many young players first begin to understand what it means to train, compete, represent a team and enjoy the game in a structured environment. Through this championship, we are reaching communities across Grenada, Carriacou and Petite Martinique and creating opportunities for both boys and girls to become part of the football pathway. We are grateful to Beacon Insurance, the Ministry of Education, the Grenada Union of Teachers and all of the schools, teachers and coaches whose support makes a programme of this scale possible."

Beacon Insurance's involvement as Title Sponsor places the company at the centre of a programme connecting football with children, schools, families and communities throughout the country.

Nation Building will depend on the development of physical capabilities

By Lincoln DePradine

In the current debate about Artificial Intelligence, Grenadian engineer and businessman Dr Nicholas Earle Brathwaite says that while tools like AI and automation are "reshaping every sector of the global economy", how people benefit from the creation and application of technology also must be answered by business executives and leaders of nations.

"We must be precise about what technology is for," Brathwaite told business leaders, entrepreneurs and government officials at a forum in Nigeria.

"A serious entrepreneur needs to ask, will people's lives be made better if I build this? Will industries improve if I build this? How do we make it easier for people to access opportunities that will improve their lives and their livelihoods? These are not merely business opportunities; these are nation-building opportunities," Brathwaite said.

Brathwaite, a successful entrepreneur and also Chancellor of McMaster University in Canada, was a featured speaker at "Platform Nigeria", a twice-yearly event hosted on May 1 and October 1, which is Independence Day in Nigeria.

It's one of Nigeria's most respected public-affairs stages, and has been running for almost two decades.

The theme of the 2026 October edition was "Dream Big, Execute with Knowledge".

The aim, said Nigerian organisers, was to align "public discourse with national milestones and economic realities", with discussion on topics such as strategic planning and adaptability.

The emphasis, they explained, was on "engaging national transformation by building businesses at scale, focusing on innovation, resilience, execution and scaling".

"It is important that all stakeholders in Nigeria start paying more attention to investment in physical capabilities because nation building and national security will depend on the development of physical capabilities. The resilience of Nigerian entrepreneurs is visible everywhere; you guys are incredible," Brathwaite said to applause, on what was his first visit to Nigeria.

The visit, he said, has been a "tremendous" experience for him and his wife Janice.

"I am truly deeply grateful and honoured to be here and thankful for the opportunity to visit and experience Nigeria for the first time," said Brathwaite, who is a philanthropist, particularly in the cause of youth education and development.

In 2007, Nicholas and Janice Brathwaite established the PETNA Foundation to provide financial support for a range of initiatives in the Caribbean, African and North America.

The initiatives include a scholarship program for young people to study at McMaster University, where Brathwaite earned a degree in Applied Chemistry and Polymer Engineering.

He received an honorary doctorate from McMaster in 2018. Brathwaite also holds the M.Sc. degree from the University of Waterloo.

In his 40-minute presentation to "Platform Nigeria", Brathwaite referenced his professional career as a founding-member of nCHIP — a company that specialised in developing an industry-leading, multi-chip module assembly process — to being appointed Chief Technology Officer (CTO) when nCHIP was bought in 1995 by Silicon Valley-based Flextronics.

With the support of an "exceptional team", Flextronics was transformed into a "global enterprise", said Brathwaite, and grew approximately 100 fold in 10 years.

Revenue increased from about US$200 million to more than US$30 billion, and Flextronics was listed as number three among the "best managed" companies in the United States.

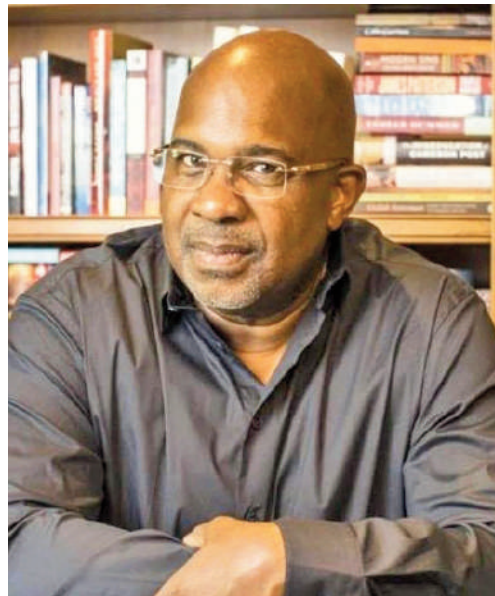

"I learnt early that my job as CTO was not to be the smartest technologist in every room. My job was to build an organisation that was capable of recruiting, training, empowering, retaining and developing brilliant engineers, technicians, operators and leaders. That is one of the transitions that every founder and every business leader must eventually make," said Brathwaite, son of former Grenada Prime Minister, the late Sir Nicholas Brathwaite.

"At the beginning your company may depend on you; but, ultimately, your job is to build an organisation that can solve problems without you."

Brathwaite retired from Flextronics to become a founding-partner of Riverwood Capital, a private equity firm.

In 2013, he became one of the founders and managing partners of Celesta Capital, a global deep tech venture capital firm.

"One of the convictions that I have carried with me throughout my career is this: being the first is not the accomplishment; it is the opportunity. I did not want that appointment to be merely a personal moment for me to enjoy. I wanted to make sure that I use it to create a path for others," Brathwaite said.

Grenadian-born engineer and businessman Dr Nicholas Earle Brathwaite

"I also understood something else. If I failed, I could be seen as a mistake never to be repeated. And then the door will be closed to anyone else who looks like me. So, the real test of an opportunity is not whether it changes your life; the real test is what you're able to build with that opportunity."

Brathwaite, offering advice and suggestions to the Nigerian audience, emphasised the importance of building capacity and highlighted the need for scalable businesses to confront the concern of how to "make it easier for people to access opportunities that will improve their lives and their livelihoods".

Businesses also must address "questions like how do we produce, process, store and move food, with less waste and greater reliability," Brathwaite added.

"How do we move goods from farms and factories to markets and ports predictably, affordably and safely? How do we build health systems that diagnose earlier and deliver care more reliably?"

Brathwaite encouraged Nigerians to build organisations "capable of solving tough problems".

"The organisation you build has to solve problems repeatedly, reliably, and at scale. Scale, therefore, requires a transition from heroics — which is what typically starts a business — to systems," he said.

"Heroics can launch a company; but systems are what it takes to enable a company to scale and endure," he remarked.

Nigerians ought to start applying the innovation that they have shown in the digital world, Brathwaite urged.

"Technology matters and it matters enormously. And this is a very tech-savvy country with a huge competitive advantage globally, where the large majority of your population is 18 years old or younger. That is a huge advantage."

Technology software is "important and essential", Brathwaite said. However, "nation building and national prosperity must include a physical dimension," he argued.

"You cannot feed a nation on an app alone; you cannot power a factory with a slogan," said Brathwaite. "You cannot diagnose a patient, move goods to a port, or manufacture

Ghana sends 61 health workers to Grenada under Labour Export Programme

Some of the Ghanaian health care workers who have arrived in Grenada

Ghana has deployed some sixty-one health workers to the Caribbean nation of Grenada under an arrangement with the country. The government of Ghana's Labour Export Programme seeks to tackle the Caribbean nation's shortage of skilled health-care professionals, while seeking job opportunities for Ghanaian health workers. These health workers will serve in different medical facilities under two-year renewable contracts. Ghana's Chief of Staff, Julius Debrah, charged the workers to be professional and ethical as they serve as ambassadors of Ghana. "Your certificate or your qualification may open the door for you, but your character will determine how long the door will be kept open," Dr Debrah said. The Minister of Labour, Jobs and Employment, Emmanuel Kwadwo Agyekum, advised them to respect the terms of their contract at all times. "Go and work well, don't mess up. Try and raise the flag of Ghana. Be professional. Professionalism is key. This is what we expect from you," he said. The Minister revealed that the government is planning to deploy additional health workers to Germany and other Caribbean nations. The Labour Export Programme seeks to create employment opportunities abroad for Ghanaians and also help recipient nations to tackle their health sector staff shortages.

Grenada plans for dramatic growth over the next five years

The Grenada Tourism Authority has unveiled ambitious plans to increase its hotel room inventory by more than 30% over the next five years. Between 2026 and 2031, Grenada and sister island Carriacou will add more than 670 hotel guestrooms, suites and luxury residences, reflecting robust momentum for the "Spice Isle of the Caribbean." "For U.S. travelers, this expansion will create even more ways to experience Grenada, from globally recognized luxury brands to the distinctive independent hotels for which the island is renowned," says Emil Edwards, director of sales for the U.S. at the Grenada Tourism Authority. Leading the wave of premier developments is the 120-room InterContinental Grenada Resort & Spa, scheduled to welcome guests in November. Looking ahead, the 300-room Wyndham Levera will expand to 500 rooms through a phased development, targeting a Q1 2028 debut. Existing properties across the island are also executing significant growth strategies. Calabash Hotel, Grenada's only Relais & Châteaux member and a two Michelin key property, has increased its inventory for the first time since the 1990s. After launching four Superior Deluxe Suites in April, the hotel unveiled two secluded Hillside Penthouse Suites this month. The luxury brand Silversands has also announced a sweeping multiproperty expansion. New accommodations will roll out at Silversands Grand Anse across the fall and spring, followed by Silversands Beach House in fall 2029. Additionally, the phased, beachfront Silversands Mome Rouge project will bring more than 100 rooms to the island's southern tip. Between 2026 and 2027, developments and expansions are underway at several boutique hotels and villas, including The Point at Petite Calivigny, the Cabier Hotel & Marina and Bartholomew Villas. The development surge extends to Carriacou. The family-owned True Blue Bay Garden Resort will launch a new eco-conscious boutique resort along the island's white sand coast in early 2028.

essential equipment, using software alone." According to Brathwaite, "Nigerians have grit" and their "resilience deserves tremendous admiration". But, as he put it, "grit alone is not enough. Grit may be enough to survive, but grit alone is not enough to scale. A nation will become prosperous not because its people are skilled at overcoming dysfunction. But a nation becomes prosperous when the solutions to dysfunction become repeatable systems, and when those systems raise productivity for everyone". Nigeria's opportunity is to "convert constraints into industries", including examining how "health-care gaps can become an opportunity to build diagnostics, medical devices, and create local technical capabilities that don't exist today", Brathwaite suggested. Nigerian entrepreneurs, he said, "must build with rigour, build with integrity, and develop businesses

"that can be trusted" and also "build systems that work without them". "Start in Nigeria. Start solving Nigerian problems but build with a standard that permits you to serve West Africa, the continent, the diaspora, and global markets. Local relevance should be your starting point. Global dominance should be your objective," Brathwaite said. "And when you build make sure you build, so that it works without you."

The demise of Grenada's Rusty Scales

By Simeon Collins

The evolution of marketplace commerce is often a quiet transformation, written in the steady replacement of old tools with new technologies.

In Grenada, this shift is perfectly captured by the history of its weights and measures. For generations, the rhythm of local trade was defined by the clink of metal imperial weight stones and the ticking springs of mechanical counter scales.

However, the island's unique tropical, marine environment introduced a quiet saboteur: rust. What began as an early system of basic trade protections overseen by law enforcement has matured into a sophisticated, scientifically regulated framework managed by modern standards.

This article explores how Grenada transitioned from police-guarded treasury weights to precision engineering, highlighting how the dramatic eradication of corrupted marketplace scales paved the way for consumer trust and fair trade across the Spice Island.

From Police Custody to Scientific Standards

Before modern technical frameworks existed, metrology - the science of measurement - in Grenada fell under a completely different jurisdiction.

Historically, the enforcement of weights and measures was handled directly by the Royal Grenada Police Force. Under this early system, the physical, master imperial standard weights and measuring gauges were safely locked away and kept directly inside the Government Treasury for safekeeping.

However, as the island's economy expanded and modern commercial networks grew, this arrangement became unsustainable. Facing an eventual rise in specialised crimes, greater societal demands, and increasingly complex responsibilities, the police force needed to focus its full attention on public safety and core law enforcement duties.

It became necessary to remove consumer measurement oversight from the police and hand it over to a dedicated scientific body. This structural shift culminated in the passing of the Standards Act of 1989, which established the Grenada Bureau of Standards (GDBS) as a corporate body designed to drive the national quality infrastructure and serve as Grenada's designated National Metrology Institute

(NMI).

Early on, a critical metrology survey conducted by the newly formed bureau revealed a massive issue: most commercial weighing and measuring devices across the island showed incorrect readings due to a lack of routine maintenance, repairs, and calibration.

In response, the GDBS launched targeted initiatives to upgrade and verify national measurement devices to ensure fair trade.

Operating under its Legal Metrology Inspectorate (LMI), the Bureau expanded its technical capabilities, establishing core verification services in mass, volume, and temperature while supporting local commerce with strict equipment calibration.

Inspection Sweeps and Friction in the Market

To enforce these rules, the LMI routinely deploys inspectors to commercial hubs - including major local produce and fish markets - to conduct structured Market Scale Verification exercises, colloquially known as the "Stamping of Scales".

During these sweeps, inspectors test devices for initial or in-service verification, checking the exact tolerance thresholds and maximum permissible error margins defined by law.

Any scale that meets accuracy standards is fitted with a highly visible, official LMI "PASSED" Verification Sticker. Consumers across Grenada are actively advised to look for this sticker to confirm they are receiving a fair transaction.

This level of scientific oversight did not come without friction. Initially, during the early transition years, some shopkeepers and marketplace vendors were deeply unresponsive to the inspectors of the Bureau of Standards, viewing the new technical rules and routine inspections as an unwelcome disruption to their traditional businesses.

To manage this hostility and ensure compliance, the Bureau heavily relied on the presence of a uniformed police officer to accompany inspectors when visiting uncooperative premises.

This official show of law enforcement presence was essential to defuse tension and maintain order. Today, this friction no longer exists; vendors universally understand and respect the verification process as a mutually beneficial standard that protects both their businesses and their client base.

The Modernization of Scales (Without an Imperial Ban)

Historically, Grenada has relied on the British Imperial system of weights and measures for trade, commerce, and daily life. Goods like flour, sugar, meat, and local produce have traditionally been measured in pounds (lbs) and ounces (oz) using the avoirdupois system, while liquids relied on pints, quarts, and imperial gallons.

Markets and merchant shops commonly used traditional mechanical counter scales, spring balance scales, and two-pan beam balances.

When the government passed the National Metrology Act (Chapter 205B), it introduced the unified International System of Units (SI) as the official legal standard. Crucially, however, the law retained the legal use of the Imperial system concurrently under Section 3.

While the Act provides the legal authority for a government minister to phase out imperial measurements over time, a total metric mandate has not been enacted for retail commerce.

Because a full phase-out was never forced, legitimate, accurate imperial scales were not seized or banned. Instead, modernisation happened organically.

Over the years, as older mechanical and spring-loaded imperial scales broke down naturally, shopkeepers voluntarily replaced them with modern digital scales because they were faster, more precise, and often featured dual-display capabilities (supporting both metric grams and traditional imperial pounds).

Today, many old brass and iron weight stones simply sit in the back of old merchant shops as nostalgic heirlooms representing Grenada's old market days. The only weights and scales actively seized and destroyed by authorities during routine sweeps were fraudulent or intentionally broken equipment used by dishonest vendors to short-change customers.

The Crisis of the Fish Market Scales

The island's fish markets and vendor stalls historically presented a unique problem that forced inspectors to take drastic action.

Because fish markets are constantly exposed to salt-water, moisture, and sea air, the mechanical spring and counter scales used by vendors were heavily rusted and corroded.

Rust seeps deep into the internal springs, gears, and pivots of a mechanical scale, altering tension and friction. This made it physically impossible for inspectors to calibrate or verify them accurately.

Due to internal rust, many of these scales would stick or seize, frequently causing consumers to be heavily shortchanged on the weight of their catch.

When the GDBS and market inspectors conducted sweeps, these rusty scales failed verification completely. Because they could not be adjusted, safely stamped, or saved, they were officially condemned, seized, and destroyed on the spot to protect consumers from unfair pricing.

This aggressive push forced a major modernisation in Grenada's fish markets, such as the Melville Street Fish Market in St. George's.

Vendors transitioned to plastic-cased, stainless steel, and eventually digital scales that could withstand the harsh, salty environment without rusting away and losing accuracy - allowing consumers to continue buying their fish by the pound with confidence.

Conclusion: A Foundation for Fair Trade

Ultimately, the transition away from police enforcement and rusty mechanical equipment to modern, verified scientific standards marks a crucial chapter in Grenada's commercial development.

By weeding out inaccurate systems and protecting consumers from being shortchanged, the country successfully established economic trust.

Whether a vendor chooses to price their goods in metric kilograms or traditional imperial pounds, the presence of verified, rust-free digital scales ensures that fair trade and mathematical precision remain the true standards of the Grenadian marketplace.

DPM's "Northern Economic Zone" for St. Patrick development growth

A "Northern Economic Zone", designed to unlock the agricultural, maritime, tourism and human-resource potential of St. Patrick, will be undertaken by a Democratic People's Movement (DPM) government.

The Economic Zone will anchor an ambitious project for socio-economic development for the people of St. Patrick, according to DPM Political Leader MP Peter David.

"Not everything has to be concentrated in St. George's," David told DPM supporters in St. Patrick.

He was speaking at the launch of the DPM's election candidate for St. Patrick East, Dishon Edwards.

David said greater attention must be paid to rural development and the untapped economic potential of St. Patrick.

The time has come to move beyond an economic model, concentrated largely around St. George's, and create sustainable opportunities in communities across the north, he added.

Dishon Edwards – the Candidate for DPM in St. Patrick East

DPM's planned "Northern Economic Zone", David explained, would be built around several complementary sectors, including maritime activity, port infrastructure, a marina, tourism, agriculture and youth development.

David pointed specifically to the potential for establishing a port facility in northern Grenada, which would create new economic activity in the north and also reduce the need for residents and businesses to travel to St. George's for maritime services.

The DPM leader also highlighted the possibility of developing a marina and reviving discussions around a yachting free zone which, he said, could generate increased yacht traffic, and create opportunities for businesses and service providers in St. Patrick and surrounding communities.

"That is a potential that we have to unlock," David said of the parish's maritime opportunities.

Tourism would also form a major pillar of the proposed Economic Zone.

David referenced St. Patrick's historic sites, suggesting that greater investment in the parish's heritage and tourism assets could generate jobs and ensure that communities where attractions are located benefit directly from visitor spending.

DPM Political Leader Peter David – is contesting the City seat

He also identified agriculture as a major component of the "Northern Economic Zone", saying St. Patrick possesses significant agricultural potential that can be transformed into meaningful economic opportunities.

But, at the heart of the DPM's vision, David said, is employment for young people. "We want to create sustainable employment right here in the Parish of St. Patrick. That's the vision," he said.

The Movement, said David, wants young people to have access to training and certification in emerging fields, allowing them to benefit from technological advances and new economic opportunities rather than being dependent on short-term programmes.

The "Northern Economic Zone" represents a broader DPM commitment to decentralising development and creating economic opportunities closer to where people live, David said.

"St. Patrick has too much potential to continue to be just a rural place and just a place that people are struggling for survival," he said.

The DPM's core programmatic platform, which members have publicly spoken about for the last several months, includes a national development strategy aimed at creating jobs that "pay and stay"; expanding economic activity beyond the capital; and, ensuring that St. Patrick plays a greater role in Grenada's future economic growth.

The Caribbean underuses private aviation as an economic sector

By Cdr. Bud Slabbaert

The Caribbean under-stands aviation. But does it fully understand private aviation? The potential blind spot is the distinction between airline passengers and private-aviation passengers.

Commercial aviation brings visitors according to a published route network. Private aviation can bring visitors according to their own economic decisions, be it property ownership, investment, yacht activity, and they bring high-value spending. Yet, often with a much smaller number of passengers per arrival.

The ultimate objective should not be increased private aircraft movements. It is about more high-value people coming to the island and more of them deciding they want to have a stake in the destination's future.

On many smaller Caribbean islands, private aviation appears to be under-recognised as a strategic economic sector, and its potential as a high-value tourism and investment channel may not be fully incorporated into their destination promotion strategy. Actually, it should be separated from the latter.

The private jet can be the first arrival of an investor, not merely the arrival of a tourist. Private aviation should be considered a business-development tool, rather than merely a transportation service for wealthy tourists. But who thinks about the entire private-aviation ecosystem as an economic-development strategy? That is exactly where a smaller island could potentially have an opportunity.

A destination that positions itself as high-end could potentially use private aviation not only to bring affluent vacationers, but also investors, entrepreneurs, family offices, developers, film producers, yacht owners and corporate decision-makers.

Who are the relatively small number of people who can influence where wealthy families fly, stay, own property and invest?

If Caribbean governments want higher-value tourism and visitors, why aren't they systematically asking 'Family-Office Aviation Advisers'? Possibly because they have never heard of the existence of this species. Family-what?

Family-Office Aviation Advisers, the ones who guide wealthy families and their offices, worth hundreds of millions or billions of dollars, to make informed aviation decisions for their travel, investments, and business activities.

Ever heard of GFOIS? A Global Family Office Investment Summit specifically targets family offices, private investors, family businesses and UHNW (ultra-high-net-worth) participants.

Less aviation-specific, but reaching the wealth decision-making environment. For instance, GFOIS Miami in October is widely regarded as the largest and most influential gathering of private wealth in the USA, bringing together 500+ family offices, 200+ speakers, and 50+ partners from across the globe.

A change in strategy may be appropriate. Instead of asking: "How many private jets are coming?" The question should be: "Who advises where those private jets go?" Then try to build a relationship with some strategically select advisers, family-office travel executives, private banks or UHNW concierge firms.

There may be relatively few with high relevance to the Caribbean market. But it is potentially a much more manageable target than trying to market to the entire private-aviation industry at major aviation or tourism conventions.

How about organising a familiarisation trip (FAM trip). Not for the media, but rather for a carefully selected group of 'Family Advisors'? A sophisticated concept that can be much more powerful and profitable than a conventional tourism media trip. Let them stay somewhere exceptional.

See the island. Meet the right people and the authorities. Look at investment and life-style opportunities. Enjoy the destination. Turn the trip into an investment generator.

Business aviation is present in the region but often disguised as "private aviation." A businessman flying his family to a Caribbean residence is simultaneously using an aircraft for personal travel and potentially conducting business while there. The same aircraft can serve both purposes.

Does the island have appropriate facilities for this businessman to communicate? He must stay in contact with overseas business, industry, or financial markets but prefers not to do so from the family vacation residence.

A business center with secretarial service and professional-looking settings equipped for proficient teleconferences. The presence of such a center may increase the frequency of the island visit or extend the duration of a stay.

Even setting up such a business center on an island could be an investment project and it could have the magnetic force of gravity. Ironically, it is not a typical tourist attraction. Yachting reinforces priate aviation. The super-yacht presence in the Caribbean makes a particularly interesting combination: private aircraft + yacht + luxury resort + second home. Someone may fly privately to an island destination and then move by yacht.

Private jets are often viewed as symbols of luxury rather than tools for economic development; a major misconception. The opportunity lies not in the aircraft, but in the people aboard.

An economic-development strategist would focus on the passengers, who may represent vast purchasing power, investment capital, business connections, and influence.

For Caribbean governments, private/business aviation should move from the airport department into the economic-development conversation as the question becomes: "What happens economically after this particular aircraft type lands?"

The Caribbean islands have spent decades competing for seats on airline flights. Perhaps it should compete for the people who own, charter and fly the aircraft.

Let it not be an "aviation marketing" program, make it an economic-development package supported by private aviation.

The Attorney- General assures Grenadians that high court claims concerning the electoral process are being addressed appropriately

The Office of the Attorney-General, led by the Attorney-General, Sen. the Hon. Claudette Joseph, affirms that it is treating with the claim brought in the High Court of Grenada that seeks to challenge certain aspects of the electoral process.

The Office of the Attorney-General has retained and is instructing external counsel to give legal advice and representation to the Defendants in the claim. This team is led by Dr. Francis Alexis KC and further comprises Mr. Ruggles Ferguson KC and Mr. Ian Sandy.

This legal team is treating with these proceedings in the appropriate manner and is taking all necessary steps to represent the interests of the Defendants and to assist the Court in the determination of the issues raised.

The Office of the Attorney-General remains satisfied that the electoral process is being conducted in accordance with the Constitution and laws of Grenada and reiterates its commitment to upholding the rule of law to support a fair, transparent and orderly electoral process.

Who Gets to Sell a Passport? The EU's Caribbean Ultimatum and the Rule That Quietly Changed

By Camila Serrano

Some countries sell citizenship. Pay a few hundred thousand dollars into a government fund or buy approved real estate, and, within months, you possess that nation's passport. The industry calls these citizenship-by-investment (CBI) programs; everyone else calls them golden passports.

On June 25, 2026, the European Commission wrote to five eastern Caribbean nations - Antigua and Barbuda, Dominica, Grenada, St. Kitts and Nevis, and St. Lucia - asking them to shut these passport programs down by June 1, 2028.

The Commission offered a two-year wind-down period, with interim conditions (tighter background checks and excluding anyone under EU sanctions) due by September 2026.

The threat is specific: keep selling, and citizens of those countries lose visa-free travel to Europe's Schengen Area, the access that, in large part, makes these passports worth buying.

Most coverage treats this as the sequel to a 2025 Court of Justice of the European Union ruling against Malta. It isn't, and the gap matters. Malta, a member of the European Union ("EU"), sold citizenship too, and because a Maltese passport is also an EU passport, buyers gained the right to live and work anywhere in the Union.

The Commission sued, and, in an April 2025 decision, the EU's highest court found the CBI program to be illegal. The Court's objection was structural: handing over nationality for a fixed payment turns citizenship into a product, and EU citizenship "cannot result from a commercial transaction."

As a result of the ruling, Malta repealed the program three months later in July 2025. Today, no EU member state sells its citizenship.

At the center of this debate is the concept of a "the genuine link," the idea that nationality may reflect a meaningful connection between an individual and a state.

The concept is often associated with Nottebohm, a 1955 International Court of Justice case involving a man who purchased Liechtenstein citizenship after living his entire life elsewhere.

But the Court of Justice of the European Union did not adopt a general "genuine link" requirement in Commission v. Malta.

Instead, the Court focused on the transactional nature of Malta's program, holding that EU citizenship "cannot result from a commercial transaction" in which nationality is granted in direct exchange for predetermined payments or investments.

The European Union's letter regarding the Caribbean programs goes further: operating such a CBI program constitutes, in and of itself, a ground for suspending visa-free status. This is a different standard than the one applied to Malta.

There, the Court held that a member state infringes EU law when it grants nationality "in direct exchange for predetermined investments or payments through a transactional procedure." The problem was the method, a naturalisation process reduced to a purchase.

Here, the Commission targets the program itself: the "operation of an investor citizenship scheme" is a "self-standing ground" for suspending visa-free travel, "regardless of how well it is managed."

The Commission's position appears to treat the existence of the programs themselves as sufficient, rather than asking whether particular applicants maintain meaningful ties to the issuing state.

It's a costly shift for the region. In September 2025, the five countries built a joint regulator with binding standards, biometric screening, and shared vetting designed to strengthen the integrity of their CBI programs.

Under the Commission's current position, however, those reforms may not be enough. The subject isn't compliance but the existence of the program. The principle gets harder to defend once you see who else sells something similar.

Golden visas, residence-by-investment (RBI) programs, remain open in some form in most member states, including Greece, Portugal, Italy, Hungary. Each sells a residence permit that starts the clock toward the same citizenship, just a few years later.

Malta's own residence program survived the court's ruling untouched. So the real line the EU has drawn isn't between citizenship that reflects belonging and citizenship that doesn't; it's between buying the passport now and buying it in five years.

The United States makes the point too. In December 2025, the Trump administration launched the Gold Card: U.S. residency, and eventually citizenship, for a $1 million payment, the same week it barred citizens of Antigua and Dominica from entering the country, citing their own citizenship programs as a security risk.

Take-up has been limited, however, with only 338 people having applied by spring 2026, against a projected 80,000. The Niskanen Center has documented that contradiction in detail.

That said, the EU's security concerns aren't invented. Due diligence failures in these programs are real and documented; Vanuatu lost its own visa waiver in 2022 after weak vetting let people evade sanctions and prosecution.

But security alone doesn't explain the shape of the rule. If "genuine link" were really the operating principle, it would chase missing ties wherever they turn up, including inside the EU and in slower-moving programs that end at the same destination. It doesn't. It targets direct sales by small countries that depend on a visa waiver the EU alone controls.

The process gives away the game. Malta, as a member state, got a lawsuit, an Advocate General's opinion, a full hearing, and a written judgment it could contest in court. The Caribbean five, as sovereign outsiders, got a letter and a deadline. With no equivalent judicial forum in which to defend their citizenship laws, all five leaders met in Dominica on July 10 and agreed to send a joint delegation to Brussels in September 2026.

That leaves negotiation as the only avenue open to them, which means the outcome will track bargaining power, not legal argument. In a courtroom, sovereignty over nationality, the reach of Nottebohm, and the differential treatment of CBI and RBI schemes are all live doctrinal questions the Caribbean five could press.

In a negotiation, none of that features - what moves the outcome is what each side can credibly offer or withhold. The Caribbean isn't as powerless in these negotiations as the asymmetry suggests, because the concession Brussels is demanding isn't one these governments can afford to make.

CBI receipts run at roughly 4.3% of the ECCU's GDP and 14.5% of government revenue, a share too structural to their fiscal base to trade away. As Antigua's Prime Minister Gaston Browne put it in refusing to shut the programs down, they are "critical pillars of our non-tax revenue base."

The first sign of where the bargaining lands will come in December when the Commission's next report is due. Some industry participants expect a compromise (added residency requirements and biometric screening) rather than a full shutdown. That compromise would instead bring the programs closer to the "genuine link" standard the Court set in Commission v. Malta.

If negotiations preserve CBI programs with genuine-link requirements, the result may expose a tension in EU law. Regulation 2025/2441 expressly targets schemes lacking a genuine link, while Commission v. Malta declined to recognize a general genuine-link requirement.

The Caribbean dispute may clarify whether the EU objects to investor citizenship itself or only to citizenship granted without meaningful ties.

Haiti: When the Promise of a Haitian-Led Solution Begins to Fade

Who speaks for Haiti? It is a question the international community can no longer avoid.

For years, governments and international organisations have insisted that the country's deepening crisis must have a "Haitian-led solution". The principle is sound. Haitians must determine their country's future. But the expression is wearing thin because there is little evidence of a sufficiently legitimate, representative and coherent political process capable of delivering such a solution.

The issue is not whether the solution should be Haitian-led. It is who may legitimately claim to lead it, and by what mandate.

UN experts have presented mounting evidence alleging that some persons who have exercised political influence in Haiti maintained relationships with the armed gangs responsible for much of the country's destruction.

A report by the United Nations Panel of Experts on Haiti describes connections between armed groups and political, economic and security actors. It identifies former legislators allegedly involved in supporting criminal organisations and warns that relationships between gangs and political figures could be used to influence elections.

The report alleges that former parliamentarian Alfrédo Junior Antoine supplied weapons, ammunition and financial resources to armed groups. It also alleges that former Senator Nelé Cassy supported armed men to advance his political interests. Both have denied the allegations.

The experts warn that political figures with historical connections to gangs may exploit those relationships to mobilise support, intimidate opponents and influence electoral outcomes.

These allegations require investigation and due process. But their wider significance is unmistakable. Haiti's criminal organisations do not operate in isolation from the country's political and economic life.

Gangs have been used to control territory, protect commercial interests, intimidate opponents and acquire influence.

The question, therefore, is not simply how Haiti can defeat its gangs. It is how the country can establish legitimate government when networks that have exercised political influence are implicated in sustaining criminal power.

A Chatham House study published in August 2026 confronts this difficulty directly. Its authors observe that diplomats routinely call for Haitian leadership without adequately answering which Haitians are supposed to provide it.

Based on interviews with 1,332 Haitian adults in May, the study reveals the wishes of ordinary Haitians and the conduct of their political class.

More than 75 percent of respondents expressed little or no trust in politicians. Only 2.9 per cent had a great deal of trust in them.

Yet almost 90 percent considered elections important to Haiti's future, while 82.9 percent wanted them held in 2026 or 2027. The survey also found that 83.4 percent opposed allowing gang members or gang leaders to hold positions in government, while 66.9 per cent rejected amnesty for armed group members.

These findings suggest that Haitians have not abandoned democracy, legitimate government or accountability. What they distrust is a political class that has failed to deliver them.

The absence of agreement among politicians should not be mistaken for an absence of national aspirations. Nor can an arrangement among competing political interests automatically be described as "Haitian-led" simply because its participants are Haitian.

The electoral timetable has now been thrown into uncertainty. Presidential and legislative elections had been scheduled for 13 December 2026, but the Provisional Electoral Council has extended candidate registration until 31 October, postponed the campaign timetable and indicated that a revised electoral calendar will be published.

Even if another date is announced, the deeper questions remain: who will control the political process, and will criminal organisations or their sponsors influence its outcome?

International fatigue is another danger. Yet progress remains painfully limited. Other conflicts, economic pressures and security priorities compete for attention and resources.

If international engagement weakens, ordinary Haitians will suffer. Those who profit from weapons and drug trafficking, extortion, kidnapping, territorial control and diverted public resources will not.

Political and economic actors who benefit from weakened institutions have little interest in independent courts, accountable policing or transparent administration.

Haiti must not be abandoned because its political actors cannot agree. That would leave the population to bear the consequences of failures for which ordinary citizens have little responsibility.

Equally, international assistance cannot mean financing one transitional arrangement after another without clear obligations, measurable results and accountability.

Haitian ownership must be preserved, but its meaning must be clarified.

It should mean supporting institutions with lawful mandates, transparency and public accountability. Participation must extend beyond political factions to civil society, community organisations, women and young people, professional and religious bodies, and legitimate private-sector representatives.

It should mean listening to the Haitian population, whose priorities the Chatham House study has helped to illuminate. It should also mean investigating the networks identified by the UN experts, enforcing sanctions, interrupting weapons supplies and ensuring that persons credibly implicated in serious crimes face independent judicial scrutiny.

The Gang Suppression Force and the Haitian National Police must receive the resources necessary to protect communities, alongside the judicial and administrative institutions without which security gains cannot endure.

The same Chatham House survey revealed understandable caution. Although 49.5 percent supported the Force's presence, 54.2 per cent doubted that it could accomplish its mission.

That scepticism strengthens the case for adequate resources, clear objectives, measurable performance and accountability.

None of this requires foreign governments to choose Haiti's leaders or dictate its constitutional future. That would undermine the sovereignty international assistance is supposed to protect. But sovereignty must not become an excuse, within Haiti, for ignoring criminal influence, institutional failure or the absence of accountable leadership.

The Caribbean Community (CARICOM) and the Organisation of American States (OAS) have a particular responsibility to insist upon this distinction. Their engagement should broaden Haitian participation and strengthen institutions capable of commanding public confidence.

Haiti's tragedy is not that its people lack the desire for democracy. It is that the institutions through which their wishes should be expressed have been weakened, while armed groups and their associates have acquired extraordinary influence.

The expression "Haitian-led solution" should never be abandoned as a principle. But it must not be invoked, whether by Haitian political actors or international partners, as a substitute for confronting the realities that have repeatedly prevented such a solution from becoming legitimate, meaningful and sustainable.

A genuinely Haitian-led solution requires more than agreement among political factions. It requires an inclusive national process, transparent and time-bound transitional arrangements, the exclusion of criminal influence, stronger public institutions and credible elections in which Haitians can freely choose their leaders.

International partners should support that process with security, resources and technical assistance, while insisting upon accountability and measurable progress.

The Haitian people have the right to determine their future. The task now is to ensure that this right belongs to them, and not to the gangs or those who sustain them.

GFA and Beacon Insurance Launch Nationwide Primary Schools Football Championships

* From page 10

Manager, Client Services & Agencies – Regional, Beacon Insurance, delivered the title sponsor's remarks during the launch programme. "Beacon Insurance is proud to support an initiative that reaches young people and communities throughout Grenada, Carriacou and Petite Martinique. Sport has the ability to build confidence, discipline, teamwork and healthy habits, and we are pleased to partner with the GFA in creating opportunities for children to experience those values through football."

Education stakeholders also played a central role in the launch, reflecting the importance of collaboration between the football and school systems. Remarks were delivered by Dr. Dianne Abel Jeffery, Chief Education Officer; Ernest Richardson, Second Vice President of the Grenada Union of Teachers; and Dimeon Castle, Assistant Coordinator of Sports. Their inclusion underscored the role played by principals, teachers, coaches and school administrators in facilitating football participation and helping students balance sporting involvement with their wider educational development.

The scale of participation in the Girls' Competition is particularly significant, with 51 schools registered to compete. The strong representation of girls alongside the 54 schools entered in the boys' category supports the GFA's objective of creating meaningful playing opportunities for both genders from the earliest stages of the football pathway.

George Phillip, Primary School Football Coordinator, presented the competition overview during the launch, before the championships were formally declared open. The programme also incorporated Players' and Coaches' Oaths, placing emphasis on sportsmanship, responsibility and the values expected throughout the competition.

With the launch now complete, attention shifts to October 14, when schools across the country begin competition. Over the ensuing two months, the GFA will use the championships not only to provide competitive football for primary school students, but also to strengthen engagement with schools and communities, broaden participation among boys and girls and connect promising young players with the Association's wider development structures.

The GFA-Beacon Insurance Primary Schools Football Championships therefore represent more than a school tournament. They form part of an increasingly structured pathway designed to give young Grenadian players more opportunities to begin, develop and progress in the game.

The Death of Andrew Frederick

By A Roving Reporter

When an American went missing in Grenada in July, police sought the help of the FBI within six days. Nine months after British national Andrew Frederick was found dead on the island, a formal request for assistance from Scotland Yard is still awaiting the Prime Minister's signature.

There are credible reports that a formal Letter of Request from the United Kingdom has been received by the Grenadian authorities in connection with the death of British national, Andrew Donald Frederick.

Frederick, 47, was found dead on January 4, 2026 at the property where he was staying in Lance Aux Epines.

Within days, an autopsy carried out by an independent pathologist approved by the Grenadian authorities concluded that his death was a homicide.

Despite that finding, the Acting Director of Public Prosecutions and the Royal Grenada Police Force (RGPF) announced at a joint press conference on June 25 that the investigation into his death was closed. The matter did not end there.

When Frederick's body was repatriated to the United Kingdom in August, a second post-mortem examination was carried out.

The Coroner noted that all of his organs and neck parts were absent and the cause of death is currently recorded as unascertained.

To date, the Grenadian authorities have offered no explanation as to the whereabouts of his organs and neck parts.

According to the UK's Guardian newspaper, London's Metropolitan Police has since opened its own investigation, and Senior Coroner, Lydia Brown has suspended inquest proceedings at West London Coroner's Court pending its outcome.

On 9 September, Scotland Yard confirmed that its officers had contacted the RGPF to offer assistance.

A Tale of Two Cases

The handling of the Frederick case stands in sharp contrast to that of another recent incident involving a foreign national.

When United States citizen, Elizabeth Waddell went missing after swimming off Grand Anse Beach on July 22, Commissioner of Police, Randy Connaught, flanked by four senior officers, held a press conference just six days later.

The Commissioner outlined the Coast Guard, dive and aerial searches under way and assured the public that no final conclusion had been reached.

Crucially, he confirmed that the RGPF had itself contacted the FBI to seek its assistance.

No formal request from the USA was needed. Grenada reached out.

In the Frederick case, the investigation was closed in June, the UK offered its assistance and nine months on, it was the United Kingdom that had to make a formal request.

The question being asked is why that request has not yet been answered.

The Decision Rests with the Prime Minister

A Letter of Request is a formal request between states, and it requires an answer. It asks the receiving state to cooperate with a foreign investigation and to allow that work to proceed.

The decision ultimately rests with the Prime Minister, who also holds the position of Minister of National Security.

What is at stake goes beyond a single case. It concerns establishing the truth of what happened to Andrew Frederick and it is a matter for the safety of every Grenadian and every visitor to the island.

Grenada's commitment to justice, to the rule of law and to cooperation with its international partners will be judged by how this request is handled. A prompt and positive response would demonstrate that commitment.

As Prime Minister and Minister of National Security, the decision is for Dickon Mitchell.

Our people should expect nothing less than his signature on the request made by Britain's Scotland Yard as a matter of priority.
